Proposed Amendment — Segregated fund policies

Department of Finance news release, December 19, 1996: Issuers of segregated fund policies will be allowed to elect to have their segregated funds registered under Part X.2 of the Act. The result of this election would be to exclude interests in registered segregated funds from the "foreign property" definition. However, as a consequence of the election in respect of a segregated fund, the issuer of the segregated fund would be required to pay any penalty tax under Part XI of the Act in respect of foreign property holdings of the segregated fund. [For the rest of this proposal, see under 206(1)"foreign property" — ed.]

Department of Finance news release, October 23, 1997:

4. Registered Investments

Under the proposed rules, Revenue Canada will be able to accept a segregated fund as a registered investment under subsection 204.4(1) of the Income Tax Act. If a segregated fund is accepted, an interest in the fund will not be a foreign property for the purposes of the Act. However, the insurer administering the segregated fund will be subject to tax under Part XI of the Act if the foreign property held by the segregated fund ever exceeds the 20 per cent foreign property limit.

The proposed amendments include a transitional provision. If a segregated fund that was created before 1997 is accepted by Revenue Canada as a registered investment under subsection 204.4(1) of the Act, the foreign property limit under Part XI in respect of the fund will be 60 per cent in 1999 and 40 per cent in 2000. [For the rest of this proposal, see under 206(1)"foreign property" — ed.]

Proposed Amendment — LSVCC Eligible Investments

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 16, 1999: Labour-sponsored venture capital corporations

(21) That the provisions of the Act governing labour-sponsored venture capital corporations be modified in accordance with proposals described in the budget documents tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on February 16, 1999.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: Labour-sponsored venture capital corporations (LSVCCs)

The federal government provides generous tax assistance in respect of amounts invested by individuals in LSVCCs. This assistance is provided in the form of a tax credit equal to 15 per cent of the cost of an individual's investment in an LSVCC, up to a maximum credit per year of $750. Many provinces provide similar assistance.

Measures were announced in August 1998 to help LSVCCs continue to be important suppliers of venture capital to small-and medium-sized businesses. This budget proposes further measures to encourage LSVCCs to focus more on small- business investments. The budget also proposes changes consequential to the Quebec government's decision to allow funds invested in LSVCCs to be used under the Home Buyers' Plan and the Lifelong Learning Plan. Other changes dealing with LSVCC share capital attributes, amalgamations and mergers are also proposed.

Measures to encourage investment in small business

Currently, federally-registered LSVCCs are subject to a federal business investment requirement that obligates them to invest 60 per cent of their shareholders' equity in eligible small businesses. These businesses are generally defined as Canadian corporations that have assets of up to $50 million and up to 500 employees. To encourage LSVCCs to focus more of their investments in smaller businesses, investments in businesses that have $10 million or less in assets are counted one and one-half times towards the federal business investment requirement. This budget proposes further measures to encourage LSVCCs to make investments in smaller business.

Community small business investment funds (CSBIFs)

CSBIFs are funds registered under Part III.1 of the Ontario Community Small Business Investment Funds Act. CSBIFs are required to invest in businesses with not more than $1 million in assets. The investments in CSBIFs of an LSVCC registered in Ontario count towards that province's business investment requirement. It is proposed that 150 per cent of the cost of such LSVCC investments count towards the federal business investment requirement.

Failure of a CSBIF to meet its investment requirement can result in a tax being levied on the CSBIF's investors. Under existing rules, where such a tax is payable by an LSVCC that is registered in Ontario but not federally, an equal tax is payable to the federal government by the LSVCC. It is also proposed to extend the matching of the Ontario tax for failure to meet a CSBIF's investment requirements to federally-registered LSVCCs.

These proposals apply to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

Early-stage financing

Very small businesses, particularly in the knowledge-based sector, report that they are having difficulty obtaining venture capital financing. To encourage LSVCCs to continue to be active participants in the early-stage financing market, this budget proposes that every $1 of eligible investment made by an LSVCC after February 16, 1999 in an eligible business with $2.5 million or less in assets be counted as $2 towards the LSVCC's federal business investment requirement.

Five-year start-up period

An LSVCC is currently not required to meet the federal business investment requirement until the expiry of a five-year period that begins when the LSVCC first issues Class A shares. During this period, there is a requirement that at least 80 per cent of the consideration received for Class A shares be invested in any combination of liquid reserves and eligible businesses.

While the five-year length of this period may have been appropriate when the LSVCC program was initiated because of the time needed for LSVCCs to address securities regulation issues and gain greater public acceptance, the five-year start- up period now can have the effect of delaying investments in eligible businesses.

It is therefore proposed that, for LSVCCs that first issue Class A shares after February 16, 1999, the five-year period be shortened to two years. The two-year period provides sufficient start-up time for new federally-registered LSVCCs and is more consistent with provincial LSVCC rules.

It is also proposed that an LSVCC be allowed to elect to shorten the period. As a result, an LSVCC will be able to elect to be subject to the federal business investment requirement, rather than subject to a requirement to have 80 per cent of consideration it has received for Class A shares be invested in a combination of liquid assets and eligible businesses. This amendment applies to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

RRSP withdrawals under the Home Buyers' Plan (HBP) and the Lifelong Learning Plan (LLP)

The HBP and the LLP allow a qualifying individual to withdraw RRSP funds on a tax-free basis to purchase a home or to pay for education. HBP withdrawals are repayable over a 15-year period, while LLP withdrawals are repayable over a 10- year period. To the extent that a scheduled repayment for a year is not made, it is added in computing the participant's income for the year.

The Quebec government has proposed to allow individuals to withdraw proceeds from the redemption of provincial LSVCC shares held within an RRSP, without the provincial LSVCC credit being recovered if the withdrawal is made under the HBP or the LLP. Under existing law, the federal credit will not be recovered in these circumstances. Individuals making such withdrawals are expected to acquire replacement shares in annual amounts determined under the existing HBP and LLP repayment schedules. These replacement purchases are not eligible for the Quebec LSVCC credit. Where an individual fails to acquire LSVCC replacement shares, a special Quebec tax of 15 per cent of the shortfall is imposed on the individual to recover the LSVCC credit that Quebec provided on the purchase of the redeemed shares.

The budget proposes that purchases of replacement shares in Quebec LSVCCs likewise not be eligible for the federal LSVCC credit. In addition, where an individual fails to acquire a replacement share, it is proposed to levy a federal penalty tax that matches the special 15 per cent Quebec tax. These proposals will apply from the date the corresponding Quebec proposals apply.

Similar changes are not contemplated for federally-registered LSVCCs or LSVCCs registered in other provinces. Because shares in Quebec LSVCCs are not normally redeemable until retirement, amounts on which an LSVCC credit was paid will be available for small business investment for a considerable period of time even if withdrawn under the HBP or the LLP for part of that time. In contrast, because shares in federally-registered LSVCCs or in LSVCCs registered in other provinces may generally be redeemed without a recovery of the federal credit after eight years, it would be inappropriate to allow the amounts invested in these shares not to be available for small business investment for any length of time in that period.

Other measures on LSVCCs

For business reasons, some LSVCCs may wish to combine with other LSVCCs and continue in the LSVCC regime. Other LSVCCs may opt to no longer qualify for participation in either the federal or a provincial LSVCC regime, or cease to meet requirements for continuing to qualify. The budget proposes a number of new measures to clarify the application of the LSVCC rules in these circumstances. These proposals apply only to federally-registered LSVCCs.

Changes of attributes of LSVCC shares

The share capital of a federally-registered LSVCC must satisfy registration conditions specified in the LSVCC rules, including conditions restricting the redemption and transfer of Class A shares on which the LSVCC tax credit has been earned.

If share attributes of the capital stock of an LSVCC (including a revoked LSVCC) are changed in a manner which is inconsistent with the registration requirements for LSVCCs, the budget proposes that:

- the subsequent acquisition of any share of the capital stock of the LSVCC will not give rise to any entitlement to the LSVCC tax credit;
- the LSVCC will become subject to a new penalty, calculated in the manner described below;
- the LSVCC's subsequent monthly deficiencies under subsection 204.82(2) of the Income Tax Act will be nil — there will no longer be penalties levied for the LSVCC failing to meet the federal business investment requirement; and
- LSVCC investors will not be liable for recovery of the LSVCC tax credit under Part XII.5 of the Act on subsequent dispositions of shares issued by the LSVCC.

These proposals will also apply in the event that the LSVCC begins to wind up, and to mergers and amalgamations (other than qualifying mergers and amalgamations, which are explained below) involving LSVCCs.

The new penalty will approximate a recovery of the federal LSVCC tax credit for outstanding Class A shares, assuming a 20 per cent federal tax credit for Class A shares issued before March 6, 1996 and a 15 per cent federal tax credit for other Class A shares. However, full relief will be provided from the penalty in connection with shares held beyond the required five-year holding period for shares issued before March 6, 1996 or beyond the eight-year holding period for other Class A shares. In addition, relief will be provided on a pro-rated basis to reflect the portion of the required holding period throughout which a share has been held.

These new rules apply to changes in share attributes, amalgamations, mergers or windings-up after February 16, 1999.

Qualifying amalgamations and mergers

The existing LSVCC rules are largely silent on the consequences for new corporations established as a result of an amalgamation or merger involving a federally-registered LSVCC. Where the new corporation meets the conditions for LSVCC registration to which its predecessor was subject and Class A shareholders of the predecessor receive comparable shares of the new corporation on the amalgamation, the new corporation may continue to operate within the LSVCC regime. In these circumstances:

- the new corporation will be treated for the purposes of the LSVCC rules as a continuation of each of the predecessors; and
- the new corporation will immediately become subject to the federal business investment requirement.

Voluntary de-registration

Currently an LSVCC's registration may be revoked if it fails to comply with certain rules. Revocation does not, by itself, affect a former LSVCC's obligations to invest in eligible businesses, nor does it provide any relief for investors from recovery of the LSVCC credit if they redeem their shares before the minimum holding period has passed. There is currently no provision under which an LSVCC can voluntarily de-register.

The budget proposes that LSVCCs may voluntarily de-register and, as a consequence, be treated for tax purposes in the same manner as revoked corporations. An LSVCC may voluntarily de-register by providing the Minister of National Revenue with a certified copy of a directors' resolution indicating the LSVCC is seeking to have its LSVCC registration withdrawn.

This measure will apply after Royal Assent.

(c) except where paragraph (b) applies, each contribution made by or on behalf of a subscriber under the plan in respect of the former beneficiary under the plan is, without affecting the determination of the amount withdrawn from the plan in respect of the new beneficiary, deemed to have been withdrawn at the particular time from the plan to the extent that it was not withdrawn before the particular time.

History: Para. 204.9(4)(b) amended by 1999, c. 22, s. 71, applicable to replacements of beneficiaries that occur after 1997. It formerly read:

(b) except for the purpose of applying this subsection to a replacement of a beneficiary after the particular time, applying subsection (5) to a distribution after the particular time and applying subsection 204.91(3) to events after the particular time, paragraph (a) does not apply as a consequence of the replacement at the particular time of the former beneficiary where the new beneficiary had not attained 21 years of age at the particular time and a parent of the new beneficiary was a parent of the former beneficiary; and

Subsec. 204.9(4) amended by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 57(2), applicable to replacements of beneficiaries and distributions that occur after 1996. Subsec. 204.9(4) formerly read:

(4) For the purposes of this Part,

(a) where at any time an individual (in this paragraph referred to as the "new beneficiary") becomes a beneficiary under a registered education savings plan in place of another individual (in this paragraph referred to as the "former beneficiary") who ceases at that time to be a beneficiary under the plan, all payments made before that time into the plan in respect of the former beneficiary shall be deemed to have been made in respect of the new beneficiary; and

(b) where at any time property is transferred from a trust governed by a registered education savings plan (in this paragraph referred to as the "transferor plan") to a trust governed by another registered education savings plan (in this paragraph referred to as the "transferee plan"), unless a beneficiary under the transferee plan was, immediately before that time, a beneficiary under the transferor plan, all payments made before that time in respect of all beneficiaries under the transferor plan shall be deemed to have been made in respect of the beneficiaries under the transferee plan.

(5) Transfers between plans — For the purposes of this Part, if property held by a trust governed by a registered education savings plan (in this subsection referred to as the "transferor plan") is distributed at a particular time to a trust governed by another registered education savings plan (in this subsection referred to as the "transferee plan"),

(a) except as provided by paragraphs (b) and (c), the amount of the distribution is deemed not to have been contributed into the transferee plan;

(b) subject to paragraph (c), each contribution made at any earlier time by or on behalf of a subscriber into the transferor plan in respect of a beneficiary under the transferor plan is deemed also to have been made at that earlier time by the subscriber in respect of each beneficiary under the transferee plan;

(c) except for the purpose of applying this subsection to a distribution after the particular time, applying subsection (4) to a replacement of a beneficiary after the particular time and applying subsection 204.91(3) to events after the particular time, paragraph (b) does not apply as a consequence of the distribution where

(i) any beneficiary under the transferee plan was, immediately before the particular time, a beneficiary under the transferor plan, or

(ii) a beneficiary under the transferee plan had not attained 21 years of age at the particular time and a parent of the beneficiary was a parent of an individual who was, immediately before the particular time, a beneficiary under the transferor plan;

(d) where subparagraph (c)(i) or (ii) applies in respect of the distribution, the amount of the distribution is deemed not to have been withdrawn from the transferor plan; and

(e) each subscriber under the transferor plan is deemed to be a subscriber under the transferee plan.

204.91 (1) Tax payable by subscribers — Every subscriber under a registered education savings plan shall pay a tax under this Part in respect of each month equal to 1% of the amount, if any, by which

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the subscriber's gross cumulative excess at the end of the month in respect of an individual

exceeds

(b) the total of all amounts each of which is the portion of such an excess that has been withdrawn from a registered education savings plan before the end of the month.

(2) Waiver of tax — If a subscriber under a registered education savings plan would, but for this subsection, be required to pay a tax in respect of a month under subsection (1) in respect of an individual, the Minister may waive or cancel all or part of the tax where it is just and equitable to do so having regard to all the circumstances, including

(a) whether the tax arose as a consequence of reasonable error;

(b) whether, as a consequence of one or more transactions or events to which subsection 204.9(4) or (5) applies, the tax is excessive; and

(c) the extent to which further contributions could be made into registered education savings plans in respect of the individual before the end of the month without causing additional tax to be payable under this Part if this Part were read without reference to this subsection.

(3) Marriage breakdown — If at any time an individual (in this subsection referred to as the "former subscriber") ceases to be a subscriber under a registered education savings plan as a consequence of the settlement of rights arising out of, or on the breakdown of, the marriage of the former subscriber and another individual (in this subsection referred to as the "current subscriber") who is a subscriber under the plan immediately after that time, for the purpose of determining tax payable under this Part in respect of a month that ends after that time, each contribution made before that time into the plan by or on behalf of the former subscriber is deemed to have been made into the plan by the current subscriber and not by or on behalf of the former subscriber.

(4) Deceased subscribers — For the purpose of applying this section where a subscriber has died, the subscriber's estate is deemed to be the same person as, and a continuation of, the subscriber for each month that ends after the death.

Proposed Amendment — "foreign property" — segregated fund annuity contracts

Department of Finance news release, December 19, 1996: (c) Foreign Property

An interest in an annuity contract will be "foreign property" for the purposes of the Act if the annuity contract is a segregated fund policy and more than 20% of the segregated fund's assets are "foreign property". As a consequence, if an RRSP or RRIF trust or any other taxpayer described in paragraphs 204(1)(a) to (f) of the Act acquires such a foreign property, it will be included in the 20% foreign property limit set out in Part XI of the Act.

If an insurer issues interests in one or more registered annuity policies directly to an RRSP or RRIF annuitant or to a registered pension plan (RPP), the insurer will be likewise liable to pay a monthly foreign property penalty tax in respect of each RRSP annuitant, RRIF annuitant and RPP equal to the amount, if positive, determined by the formula:

$$1\% \times (A - (20\% \times B))$$

where

A is the total of all premiums and other amounts paid on account of the acquisition by the RRSP annuitant, RRIF annuitant or RPP, as the case may be, of such of those interests outstanding at the end of the month as constitute foreign property, and

B is the total of all premiums and other amounts paid on account of the acquisition by the RRSP annuitant, RRIF annuitant or RPP, as the case may be, of such of those interests as are outstanding at the end of the month.

Issuers of segregated fund policies will be allowed to elect to have their segregated funds registered under Part X.2 of the Act. The result of this election would be to exclude interests in registered segregated funds from the "foreign property" definition. However, as a consequence of the election in respect of a segregated fund, the issuer of the segregated fund would be required to pay any penalty tax under Part XI of the Act in respect of foreign property holdings of the segregated fund.

Department of Finance news release, October 23, 1997: Application of Foreign Property Limit to Segregated Funds

1. Introduction

The new foreign property rules for segregated funds will apply in three situations.

First, they will apply where an interest in a segregated fund is held by a tax-exempt taxpayer described in paragraphs 205(a) to (f) of the Income Tax Act, such as a registered pension plan (RPP), a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan (RRSP) or a trust governed by a registered retirement income fund (RRIF). Such taxpayers are subject to tax under Part XI of the Act if they invest too heavily in "foreign property". Under the proposed changes, an interest in a segregated fund will, in some circumstances, become a "foreign property" and the holding of such an interest can result in Part XI tax becoming payable.

A similar penalty tax may apply where an interest in a segregated fund policy is held directly as an RRSP or RRIF (i.e., outside of an RRSP or RRIF trust), or where such an interest is issued under an RPP that is not an RPP trust or corporation. The tax will generally be collected by the insurer that issued the segregated fund policy on behalf of the policyholder that is liable to pay it.

Third, the new rules can result in Part XI tax for an insurer where the Minister accepts a segregated fund administered by the insurer as a "registered investment" under proposed amendments to Part X.2 of the Act.

The application of the proposed rules to these three situations is described below.

2. Tax payable under Part XI of the Income Tax Act by trusts governed by RRSPs, RRIFs and RPPs

General

A trust governed by an RRSP, RRIF or RPP is generally liable to pay a penalty tax under subsection 206(2) of the Act in respect of a month where the cost amount to the trust of the "foreign property" (as defined in subsection 206(1)) held by the trust exceeds 20 per cent of the cost amount to the trust of all property held by it.

Under paragraph (i) of the definition "foreign property", an interest in a trust is a foreign property, except where the trust is a "registered investment" or where the interest in the trust is prescribed not to be a foreign property under the Income Tax Regulations. Under the proposed amendments, after 1998, an interest in a segregated fund will be a treated as an interest in a trust for the purpose of Part XI. As a consequence, a trust governed by an RRSP, RRIF or RPP that holds a segregated fund policy in any month that ends after 1998 may be liable to pay the penalty tax under Part XI.

When is an Interest in a Segregated Fund Prescribed Not to be a Foreign Property?

The proposed amendments include a number of transitional provisions described below. However, section 5000 of the Regulations will prescribe an interest in a segregated fund held at a particular time not to be a foreign property in two cases:

- where the particular time is after 1999 and, throughout the last year that ended before the particular time (or at the end of the year that includes the particular time, if the fund was created in the year that includes the particular time), the total cost amount of all the foreign property held by the segregated fund does not exceed 20 per cent of the cost amount of all the property held by it; or
- where each policyholder holding an interest in the segregated fund at the particular time held an interest in the fund at the end of 1996 or acquired the interest from another policyholder who held an interest in the fund before 1997.

Transitional rules are proposed for 1999, 2000 and 2001 to give insurers an opportunity to shift the properties held by the segregated funds that they administer from foreign properties to non-foreign properties. To this end, an interest in a segregated fund will be prescribed not to be a foreign property in 1999 where:

- the segregated fund was created before 1997 and, at any time in the first 90 days of 1998, the fair market value (FMV) of all the foreign property held by the fund does not exceed 80 per cent of the FMV of all the property held by the fund;
- the segregated fund was created in 1997 or 1998 and, at any time in the first 90 days of its 1998 taxation year, the FMV of all the foreign property held by the fund does not exceed 20 per cent of the FMV of all of the property held by the fund; or
- the segregated fund was created in 1999 and, at the end of 1999, the cost amount of all of the foreign property held by the fund does not exceed 20 per cent of the cost amount of all of the property held by the fund.

In 2000, an interest in a segregated fund will be prescribed not to be a foreign property if the segregated fund was created before 1997 and, throughout 1999, the cost amount of all the foreign property held by the segregated fund does not exceed 60 per cent of the cost amount of all the property held by the fund.

In 2001, an interest in a segregated fund will be prescribed not to be a foreign property if the segregated fund was created before 1997 and, throughout 2000, the cost amount of all the foreign property held by the segregated fund does not exceed 40 per cent of the cost amount of all the property held by the segregated fund.

"Cost Amount" for the Purposes of Part XI of the Act

Under the proposed amendments, where an interest in a segregated fund is, after 1998, treated as "foreign property", the "cost amount" of the interest will be determined on a lagged basis.

Specifically, the "cost amount" of an interest in a segregated fund to an RRSP trust, RRIF trust or RPP will be its adjusted cost base (ACB), except that the ACB adjustments that would otherwise be required in a particular calendar year will not be made until after March of the following calendar year. An interest in a segregated fund will have a known constant ACB throughout each year as ACB adjustments in respect of the year will not be made until the following year, making it possible for taxpayers subject to the foreign property penalty tax to comply with the foreign property limit on an on-going basis.

3. New Foreign Property Limits with respect to Segregated Fund Policies Issued or Effected as RRSPs or RRIFs and Policies Issued under RPPs

Segregated Fund Policies Issued or Effected as RRSPs or RRIFs

The new rules will also apply where, after 1998, an individual holds an interest in a segregated fund directly as an RRSP or RRIF (i.e., outside a RRSP or RRIF trust). In general, the policyholder's liability for penalty tax will be determined on a policy-by-policy basis. Where the penalty tax is owing, the insurer that issued the segregated fund will be required to collect the penalty tax on behalf of the policyholder.

A policyholder will be liable to pay the penalty tax in respect of a segregated fund policy for any month where the total cost amount (determined on a lagged basis as described above) at the end of the month of all the interests in segregated funds under the policy that are foreign properties exceeds 20 per cent of the total of

- the cash surrender value of the policy at the end of the month (not including any amount in respect of an interest in a segregated fund), and
- the total cost amount (determined on a lagged basis) at the end of the month of all the interests in segregated funds under the policy.

For this purpose, whether an interest in a segregated fund is a foreign property is determined using the definition of "foreign property" described above.

Where an insurer has issued interests in more than one segregated fund policy, the insurer will be able to treat those policies as one policy for purposes of calculating how much penalty tax is payable. The election will allow policies that derive their value largely from foreign property to be offset by policies that derive their value largely from non-foreign property.

Segregated Fund Policies Issued under RPPs

The administrator of an RPP (other than an RPP trust or corporation) may also be liable to pay foreign property tax where the RPP is funded or partially funded by an interest in a segregated fund policy.

The administrator's liability will be determined on an insurer-by-insurer basis. As a consequence, all the segregated fund policies used to fund the RPP that were issued by a particular insurer will be grouped together for this purpose. The administrator will be liable to pay tax in a given month in respect of the policies issued by a particular insurer where the total cost amount (determined on a lagged basis as described above) at the end of the month of all the interests in segregated funds that arise under the policies and that are foreign properties exceeds 20 per cent of the total of

- the cash surrender values, at the end of the month, of all the policies (not including any amount in respect of an interest in a segregated fund), and
- the total cost amount (determined on a lagged basis) at the end of the month of all the interests in segregated funds that arise under the policies.

For this purpose, whether an interest in a segregated fund is a foreign property will be determined using the definition of "foreign property" described above.

Where an RPP is funded with segregated fund policies issued by more than one insurer, the administrator of the RPP will be able to elect to treat all such insurers as one insurer for purposes of determining its penalty tax liability. Where the policies issued by one insurer have a high foreign property content, the election will make it possible for an administrator to offset that high foreign property content with the non-foreign property content of policies issued by other insurers.

The responsibility for collecting and remitting an administrator's penalty tax falls on the insurer, unless the administrator makes the election to treat all insurers as one. Where this election is made, the responsibility for collecting and remitting the penalty tax falls on the administrator.

Notes: This amendment was reportedly in response to a plan announced by Manulife Financial to offer an RRSP-eligible segregated fund with 100% foreign content. Manulife was the only major insurer that did not voluntarily enforce the 20% foreign content limit. (Financial Post, Dec. 20/96, p. 5)

(ii) timber resource properties,

(iii) Canadian resource properties (other than properties acquired by the trust before 1972), and

(iv) businesses carried on in Canada;

(b) the only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) were from dispositions of property that would have been taxable Canadian property if, at no time in the year, the trust had been resident in Canada; and

Proposed Amendment — 210.2(2)(b)

(b) the only taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses referred to in paragraph 3(b) were from dispositions of taxable Canadian property; and

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), s. 17, will amend para. 210.2(2)(b) to read as above, applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Part XII.2 of the Act imposes a special tax on certain trusts resident in Canada with respect to distributions to non-resident beneficiaries. The tax is calculated with reference to the trust's "designated income", as determined under subsection 210.2(2). "Designated income" is calculated with reference to taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses from the trust's taxable Canada property (determined on the assumption that the trust is non-resident).

Paragraph 210.2(2)(b) is amended to remove the assumption described above. The amendment merely simplifies paragraph 210.2(2)(b) and does not represent any policy change.

(c) the only losses referred to in paragraph 3(d) were losses from sources described in subparagraphs (a)(i) to (iv).

(3) Tax deemed paid by beneficiary — Where an amount (in this subsection and subsection 210.3(2) referred to as the "income amount") in respect of the income of a trust for a taxation year is, by reason of subsection 104(13) or 105(2), included in computing

(a) the income under Part I of a person who was not at any time in the year a designated beneficiary under the trust, or

(b) the income of a non-resident person (other than a person who, at any time in the year, would be a designated beneficiary under the trust if section 210 were read without reference to paragraph 210(a)) that is subject to tax under Part I by reason of subsection 2(3) and is not exempt from tax under Part I by reason of a provision contained in a tax convention or agreement with another country that has the force of law in Canada, an amount determined by the formula

$$A \times \frac{B}{C}$$

where

A is the tax paid under this Part by the trust for the year,

B is the income amount in respect of the person, and

C is the total of all amounts each of which is an amount that is or would be, if all beneficiaries under the trust were persons resident in Canada to whom Part I was applicable, included in computing the income under Part I of a beneficiary under the trust by reason of subsection 104(13) or 105(2) in respect of the year, shall, if designated by the trust in respect of the person in its return for the year under this Part, be deemed to be an amount paid on account of the person's tax payable under Part I for the person's taxation year in which the taxation year of the trust ends, on the day that is 90 days after the end of the taxation year of the trust.

(a) no amount shall be deemed to be paid on account of the partnership's tax payable under Part I by reason of subsection (3) except in the application of that subsection for the purposes of subsection 104(31), and

(b) an amount determined by the formula

$$A \times \frac{B}{C}$$

where

A is the amount so designated,

B is the amount that may reasonably be regarded as the share of the taxpayer in the designated income of the trust received by the partnership in the fiscal period of the partnership in which the particular year ends (that fiscal period being referred to in this subsection as the "partnership's period"), and

C is the designated income received by the partnership from the trust in the partnership's period, shall be deemed to be an amount paid on account of the taxpayer's tax payable under Part I for the person's taxation year in which the partnership's period ends, on the last day of that year.

(5) Returns — A trust shall, within 90 days after the end of each taxation year,

(a) file with the Minister a return for the year under this Part in prescribed form and containing prescribed information, without notice or demand therefor;

(b) estimate in the return the amount of tax, if any, payable by it under this Part for the year; and

(c) pay to the Receiver General the tax, if any, payable by it under this Part for the year.

Related Provisions: 150.1(5) — Electronic filing.

(6) Liability of trustee — A trustee of a trust is personally liable to pay to the Receiver General on behalf of the trust the full amount of any tax payable by the trust under this Part to the extent that the amount is not paid to the Receiver General within the time specified in subsection (5), and the trustee is entitled to recover from the trust any such amount paid by the trustee.

(2) Where beneficiary deemed not designated — Where a trust would, if the trust paid tax under this Part for a taxation year, be entitled to designate an amount under subsection 210.2(3) in respect of a non-resident beneficiary and the income amount in respect of the beneficiary is included in computing the income of the beneficiary which is subject to tax under Part I by reason of subsection 2(3) and is not exempt from tax under Part I by reason of a provision contained in a tax convention or agreement with another country that has the force of law in Canada, for the purposes of subsection (1), the beneficiary shall be deemed not to be a designated beneficiary of the trust at any time in the year.

Proposed Amendment — Authorized foreign bank

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (authorized foreign banks), February 11, 1999: (3) That, for the purposes of Part XIII of the Act, an authorized foreign bank be deemed, in respect of its business in Canada, to be a person resident in Canada.

(4) That an authorized foreign bank be subject to a tax equal to the product of

(a) 25% or such lesser rate as may apply, under an income tax treaty between Canada and the country in which the authorized foreign bank is resident, to interest payable by a person resident in Canada to a person resident in that country, and

(b) 15% of the amount described in subparagraph 2(b) [see under 20(1)(c) — ed.] in respect of the bank for the year.

Department of Finance news release, February 11, 1999: Withholding Tax on Interest

(a) Foreign banks deemed resident for purposes of Part XIII tax

Subject to certain exceptions and to tax treaties, Part XIII of the Income Tax Act imposes a withholding tax on, among other things, interest paid by residents of Canada to non-residents. To treat Canadian banks and the Canadian branches of foreign banks equally, it is proposed that Part XIII of the Act be amended to treat a Canadian branch of a foreign bank as resident in Canada for the purposes of applying that Part to interest and other payments made to or by the branch.

This change will also have the effect of ensuring that all banks operating in Canada have equal access to the securities lending market.

(b) Tax re: interest on allocated debt

Although it is proposed that Canadian branches of foreign banks be allowed a deduction on account of interest on "allocated debt" (see above [under 20(1)(c) — ed.]), the interest would not, under existing rules, be subject to withholding tax. As Canadian banks would, in some cases, be subject to withholding tax in respect of funds borrowed outside Canada, a new tax is proposed to apply to a portion of the interest deducted by the Canadian branch of a foreign bank in respect of its allocated debt.

[For other proposals see under 248(1)"authorized foreign bank" — ed.]

212.2 (1) Deemed dividend — This section applies [to be changed; see below — ed.] where

(i) a person resident in Canada,

(ii) a partnership in which any person resident in Canada has, directly or indirectly, an interest, or

(iii) a person or partnership that acquires the share or the property in the course of carrying on a business through a permanent establishment in Canada, as defined by regulation;

(b) subsection 212.1(1) does not apply to the disposition;

(c) the taxpayer is non-resident at the particular time;

(d) it is reasonable to conclude that the disposition is part of an expected series of transactions or events that includes the issue after December 15, 1998 of a particular share of the capital stock of a particular corporation resident in Canada and

(i) the redemption, acquisition or cancellation of the particular share, or a share substituted for the particular share, by the particular corporation or the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be,

(A) a person not dealing at arm's length with the particular corporation or with the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be, or

(B) a partnership any direct or indirect interest in which is held by a person not dealing at arm's length with the particular corporation or with the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be; and

(2) Deemed dividend — For the purposes of this Part, where property is disposed of at any time by a taxpayer to a person or partnership in circumstances in which this section applies,

(a) a taxable dividend is deemed to be paid at that time by the person or partnership to the taxpayer and received at the time by the taxpayer;

(b) the amount of the dividend is deemed to be equal to the amount determined by the formula

$$A - ((A/B) \times C)$$

where

A is the portion of the proceeds of disposition of the property that can reasonably be attributed to the fair market value of shares of a class of the capital stock of a corporation resident in Canada,

B is the fair market value immediately before that time of shares of that class, and

C is the paid-up capital immediately before that time of that class of shares; and

(c) in respect of the dividend, the person or partnership is deemed to be a corporation resident in Canada.

Application: The December 15, 1998 draft legislation (demutualization of insurance companies), s. 7, will add s. 212.2, applicable after December 15, 1998.

Technical Notes: New section 212.2 of the Act is designed to discourage series of transactions designed so that Canadian corporate surplus distributed to non-residents escapes tax under Part XIII. The following example sets out one example of this type of series of transactions, that might be relevant in the context of a demutualization.

EXAMPLE

Holdco owns 90% of the shares of Insurco. Insurco issues shares to a non-resident policyholder on a demutualization. Rather than Insurco redeeming the share, Holdco buys the shares several days and later uses dividends received from Insurco to fund the purchase price.

If Insurco had redeemed the share, there would have been a deemed dividend equal to the amount of the proceeds of redemption. By having Holdco buy the shares, the deemed dividend rules are avoided. Dividends received from Insurco in this example would be received on a tax-free basis because of the intercorporate dividend deduction.

Specifically, section 212.2 applies where each of the following conditions is satisfied:

- a taxpayer at a particular time disposes of a share of the capital stock of a corporation resident in Canada (or any property more than 10% of the fair market value of which can be attributed to shares of the capital stock of corporations resident in Canada) to a person (referred to below as the "specified person") or partnership (referred to below as the "specified partnership) where:
  - (i) the specified person is resident in Canada,
  - (ii) any person resident in Canada has, directly or indirectly, an interest in the specified partnership; or
  - (iii) the acquisition by the specified person or specified partnership is in the course of carrying on a business through a permanent establishment in Canada;
- subsection 212.1(1) does not apply to the disposition;
- the taxpayer is non-resident at the particular time;
- it is reasonable to conclude that the disposition is part of an expected series of transactions or events that includes the issue after December 15, 1998 of a particular share of the capital stock of a particular corporation resident in Canada and
  - (i) the redemption, acquisition or cancellation of the particular share, or a share substituted for the particular share, by the particular corporation or the, or a share substituted for the particular share, by the particular corporation or the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be,
  - (ii) an increase in the level of dividends declared or paid on the particular share or a share substituted for the particular share, or

(iii) the acquisition of the particular share or a share substituted for the particular share by

(A) a person not dealing at arm's length with the particular corporation or with the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be, or

(B) a partnership any direct or indirect interest in which is held by a person not dealing at arm's length with the particular corporation or with the issuer of the substituted share, as the case may be; and

- at the particular time, the specified person or any person who has, directly or indirectly, an interest in the specified partnership knew, or ought reasonably to have known, of the expected series of transactions or events described above.

Where subsection 212.2(1) applies to the disposition of property by a taxpayer to a specified person or specified partnership, a taxable dividend is deemed by subsection 212.2(2) to have been paid by the specified person or specified partnership to the taxpayer. For this purpose, the specified person or partnership is deemed to be a corporation resident in Canada. The amount of the dividend is determined with reference to the paid-up capital of shares to which the property relates. In a simple example where subsection 212.2(1) applies in respect of a disposition of a share, the deemed dividend is equal to the amount by which the proceeds of disposition for the share exceed the paid-up capital in respect of the share.

The amount of any deemed dividend in respect of a share or other property resulting from section 212.2 is excluded under amended paragraph (k) of the definition "proceeds of disposition" in section 54 from the non-resident taxpayer's proceeds of disposition for the property. This provision is intended to ensure that no double taxation in Canada occurs in connection with the disposition by a non-resident of taxable Canadian property.

Department of Finance news release, January 14, 1999: Modification Announced To Draft Income Tax Legislation On Demutualization

Secretary of State Jim Peterson (International Financial Institutions) today announced plans to better target one of the proposed measures included in the draft income tax legislation on insurance company demutualization released on December 15, 1998.

Demutualization is a process by which mutual companies convert to stock companies. Since December 1997, Canada's four large mutual life insurance companies have announced their intention to pursue demutualization. Legislative changes to allow these companies to demutualize were passed by the House of Commons in December 1998.

The income tax measure in question is proposed section 212.2 of the Income Tax Act. This provision was intended to preclude certain transactions that would have the effect of allowing non-resident persons to receive Canadian corporate surplus distributions on a tax-free basis. However, representations received by the Department have underscored that the proposed measure has broader application than was intended outside the context of demutualization — so that transactions that do not involve the distribution of corporate surplus to non-residents could inadvertently be subject to the proposed measure.

Because of these concerns, the draft legislation on proposed section 212.2 will be revised to limit its application to a series of transactions that includes the issue of shares on a demutualization. The application of this measure outside the context of demutualization will be further reviewed to determine the desirability of its application to certain transactions which could result in corporate surplus stripping.

Mr. Peterson took this opportunity to thank tax professionals for the thoughtful comments received on this measure and to reiterate the Department's interest in receiving further comments on the proposed income tax changes dealing with demutualization.

Possible Future Amendment — Requirement for non-resident to post security

Letter from Department of Finance, June 17, 1996: Mr. Donald H. Watkins, Chair, Taxation Section, The Canadian Bar Association

Mr. Robert Spindler, C.A., Chair, Taxation Committee, Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants

Dear Messrs. Watkins and Spindler:

At our recent meeting we discussed the possibility of revising the Canadian income tax rules governing the taxation of rental income earned by non-resident owners of Canadian real estate. This letter outlines a proposal that would, if implemented, place the risk of a non-resident's non-compliance with the Canadian tax system on the non-resident rather than the non-resident's Canadian property agent.

In general, Part XIII of the Income Tax Act levies a withholding tax of 25% on rental payments made by Canadians to non-resident owners of Canadian real property. Where the non-resident collects the rent through a Canadian agent (who is typically a building or property manager), the agent is responsible for ensuring that 25% of the gross rental payments are remitted to Revenue Canada. An exception to this general rule exists where a non-resident elects, under section 216 of the Act, to file a Canadian income tax return in respect of the rental income and pay tax on the net property income.

To make the election the non-resident and the non-resident's Canadian agent are required to provide an undertaking to Revenue Canada to file an income tax return for the rental income within six months of the end of the relevant year. Where an election is made, the rule requiring the Canadian agent to remit 25% of the gross rental payments to Revenue Canada does not apply; instead, only 25% of the net amount of rent received by the agent need be remitted. However, if the non-resident fails to either file an income tax return or pay his tax liability within the time required under the election, the Canadian agent becomes liable for the amount that the agent would ordinarily have been required to withhold under Part XIII of the Act (ie., 25% of the gross rental payments) less the amount of tax actually remitted. The non-resident's tax liability is placed on the Canadian agent in an attempt to protect the government from the loss of any tax revenue arising from the non-resident's failure to pay the required tax. This mechanism is necessary because, in practice, it would be very difficult to enforce a tax liability on non-resident property owners.

We are considering alternatives to the current system which may reduce the liability of Canadian agents while at the same time protecting Canada's tax base. To achieve these objectives, we are prepared to consider a system which would require non-resident property owners to post security with Revenue Canada in order to take advantage of the election to file an income tax return and avoid having tax withheld on the gross amount of the rental payments. Where the non-resident fails to pay the required amount of tax within the specified time, the government would be able to look to the security; accordingly, the Canadian agent's exposure to tax could be reduced. In this context, acceptable security could be similar to that which is required under section 116 of the Act.

Finance is not, however, committed to this proposal; it remains our view that the current system works reasonably well from the government's viewpoint, and implementation of the alternative proposal would be considered only if it were thought to provide a better system from the taxpayer's perspective. This alternative has been outlined to a number of real estate organizations and other interested parties from whom we hope to gather comments over the course of the coming months.

I would also note that at our recent meeting you raised the possibility of considering changes to the existing time limits for filing a Part I income tax return under subsection 216(4). We would be pleased to receive written comments on your suggestion for modifying those time limits or on the alternative system outlined above.

Yours sincerely, Len Farber, Director, Tax Legislation Division, Department of Finance

Proposed Amendment — Authorized foreign bank

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (authorized foreign banks), February 11, 1999: (6) That an authorized foreign bank be subject to tax under Part XIV of the Act.

Department of Finance news release, February 11, 1999: Branch Tax

Resident corporations must pay withholding tax on dividends remitted to a non-resident parent. The concept of a dividend is not relevant to a branch office, however, as the non-resident home office is not a separate legal entity from its branches. Part XIV of the Income Tax Act imposes a "branch tax" on the earnings of a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada through a branch office, to the extent that the earnings of the non-resident corporation are not retained in Canada to fund the Canadian operations. The branch tax is designed to replicate the tax treatment of dividends. For example, the branch tax is reduced in cases where a treaty provides for a reduced withholding rate on dividends.

It is proposed that the branch tax apply to foreign banks. The application of this tax is intended to ensure that Canadian branches of foreign banks are taxed in the same manner on their surplus as Canadian subsidiaries of foreign banks.

[For other proposals see under 248(1)"authorized foreign bank" — ed.]

Related Provisions: 18(1)(t) — Tax is non-deductible; 52(7) — Cost of shares of subsidiary; 134 — Status of non-resident-owned investment corporation for purposes of s. 219; 219(1.1) — Excluded gains; 219(2) — Exempt corporations; 219.1 — Corporate emigration — 25% tax; 219.2 — Limitation on rate of Part XIV tax to dividend rate under treaties; Canada-U.S. tax treaty, Art. Proposed Addition — 220.1

220.1 (1) Security for departure tax — If an individual who is deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have disposed of a property (other than a right to a benefit under, or an interest in a trust governed by, an employee benefit plan) at any particular time in a taxation year (in this section referred to as the individual's "emigration year") elects, in prescribed manner on or before the individual's balance-due day for the emigration year, that this section apply in respect of the emigration year,

(a) the Minister shall, until the individual's balance-due day for a particular taxation year that begins after the particular time, accept adequate security furnished by or on behalf of the individual on or before the individual's balance-due day for the emigration year for the lesser of

(i) the total amount of taxes under Parts I and I.1

(A) that would be payable by the individual for the emigration year if the exclusion or deduction of each amount referred to in paragraph 161(7)(a) were not taken into account, but

(B) that would not have been so payable if each property (other than a right to a benefit under, or an interest in a trust governed by, an employee benefit plan) deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have been disposed of at the particular time, and that has not been subsequently disposed of before the beginning of the particular year, were not deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have been disposed of by the individual at the particular time, and

(ii) if the particular year does not immediately follow the emigration year, the amount determined under this paragraph in respect of the individual for the taxation year that immediately precedes the particular year; and

(b) except for the purposes of subsections 161(2), (4) and (4.01), interest is payable under this Act as if the particular amount for which adequate security has been accepted under this subsection were, for the period ending on the individual's balance-due day for the particular year and throughout which the security is accepted by the Minister, an amount paid by the individual on account of the particular amount.

Technical Notes: New subsection 220.1 of the Act permits an individual to elect, on giving security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue, to defer payment of an amount of tax that is owing as a result of the deemed disposition of a particular property (other than an employee benefit plan right) in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. If such an election is made, interest and penalties do not start to accrue on the amount secured until such time as the amount becomes unsecured, as described below.

New subsection 220.1(1) of the Act allows an individual to elect, in prescribed manner, to defer payment of an amount of tax that is owing as a result of the deemed disposition of a particular property in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. To understand how the subsection works, several points should be noted.

- The security rule is in a mechanical sense applied annually. That is, the Minister's obligation to accept security applies for one year at a time. This does not mean that the emigrant must file a renewed election each year, but only that the Minister will determine on an annual basis whether, and in what amount, the security may remain in place.
- While the election to provide security must ordinarily be made — and the security itself must be provided — on or before the individual's balance-due day for the year of emigration, special accommodation is provided for those who ceased to be resident before these proposals receive Royal Assent. Those individuals have until three months after Royal Assent to make the election and provide the security.
- The provision requires the Minister of National Revenue to accept "adequate security." The adequacy of any particular proposal for security is a matter of fact. It is understood, however, that in respect of tax on a gain from the deemed disposition of shares of a corporation, the Minister will not exclude the possibility of accepting some or all of the shares as security.

Where an individual has elected under subsection 220.1(1) and has provided adequate security, the Minister of National Revenue must, for a particular taxation year that begins after the individual ceases to be a resident of Canada, accept adequate security for the lesser of two amounts. The amounts are, in effect:

(i) the individual's taxes under Parts I and I.1 of the Act for the emigration year, to the extent those taxes are attributable to the deemed disposition under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of properties that have not been disposed of before the particular year; and

(ii) if the particular year does not immediately follow the emigration year, the amount for which security was accepted for the preceding taxation year.

Where an individual who emigrated from Canada actually disposes, in a given year, of a property that was the subject of a deemed disposition on emigration, the Minister's obligation to accept security for the tax attributable to the deemed disposition of that property lasts only until the individual's balance-due day for the given year. The amount for which the Minister must accept security, in respect of a given departure from Canada, may thus decrease from year to year as the former emigrant disposes of properties. The amount cannot, however, increase.

An amount of tax may also become unsecured if the security furnished by the taxpayer for the tax has ceased to be adequate. For further commentary in respect of inadequate security, see the note to subsection 220.1(4), below.

The effects of the acceptance of security by the Minister under subsection 220.1(1) are, first, that the Minister will not take any action to collect the tax so secured, and second, that for the purpose of computing interest owing by the taxpayer, the amount secured will be treated as an amount paid on account of the tax liability.

New subsection 220.1(1) generally applies to dispositions that occur after October 1, 1996. However, as noted above, elections made and security furnished under this subsection will be considered timely if effected before the end of the third month following the month that includes the particular day on which this Act is assented to.

Related Provisions: 128.3 — Shares acquired on rollover deemed to be same shares for 220.1; 128.1(6) — Tax cancelled if emigrant returns to Canada within 5 years; 220.1(2) — Exemption for first $25,000 of security; 220.1(3) — Security effective only for departure tax; 220.1(4) — Where security proves inadequate; 220.1(5) — Extension of time for making election.

(2) Deemed security — If an individual (other than a trust) elects under subsection (1) that this section apply in respect of a taxation year, for the purpose of this section the Minister is deemed to have accepted at any time after the election is made adequate security for a total amount of taxes payable under Parts I and I.1 for the emigration year equal to the lesser of

(a) $25,000, and

(b) the greatest amount for which the Minister is required to accept security furnished by or on behalf of the individual under this section at that time in respect of the emigration year, and that security is deemed to have been furnished by the individual before the individual's balance-due day for the emigration year.

Technical Notes: New subsection 220.1(1) of the Act permits an individual to elect, on giving adequate security to the Minister of National Revenue, to defer payment of an amount of tax that is owing as a result of the deemed disposition of a particular property in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. New subsection 220.1(2) treats an individual (other than a trust) as having furnished acceptable security to the Minister for the lesser of $25,000 and the greatest amount of tax for which the Minister is required to accept security under subsection 220.1(1) for any particular taxation year of the individual. The deemed security is treated as having been furnished by the individual before the individual's balance-due day for the year in which the individual ceased to be a resident of Canada.

The effect of this provision is to excuse individual emigrants (other than trusts) from the requirement to provide security for their first $25,000 of tax resulting from the deemed disposition on emigration.

New subsection 220.1(2) applies after October 1, 1996.

(3) Limit — Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), the Minister is deemed at any time not to have accepted security under this section in respect of an individual's emigration year for any amount greater than the amount, if any, by which

(a) the total amount of taxes that would be payable by the individual under Parts I and I.1 for the year if the exclusion or deduction of each amount referred to in paragraph 161(7)(a), in respect of which the day determined under paragraph 161(7)(b) is after that time, were not taken into account

(b) the total amount of taxes that would be determined under paragraph (a) if this Act were read without reference to subsection 128.1(4).

Technical Notes: New subsections 220.1(1) and (2) of the Act set out rules respecting the posting of security for tax that is owing as a result of a deemed disposition of property under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. New subsection 220.1(3) limits the amount of tax that may be so secured to the total tax payable under Parts I and I.1 of the Act in respect of the application of paragraph 128.1(4)(b) in the taxation year that the individual ceased to be a resident of Canada (calculated without reference to any of the deductions or exclusions listed in paragraph 161(7)(a) of the Act).

New subsection 220.1(3) applies after October 1, 1996.

(4) Inadequate security — If it is determined at any particular time that security accepted by the Minister under subsection (1) is not adequate to secure the particular amount for which it was furnished by or on behalf of an individual,

(a) subject to a subsequent application of this subsection, the security shall be considered after the particular time to secure only the amount for which it is adequate security at the particular time;

(b) the Minister shall notify the individual in writing of the determination and shall accept adequate security, for all or any part of the particular amount, furnished by or on behalf of the individual within 90 days after the day of notification; and

(c) any security accepted in accordance with paragraph (b) is deemed to have been accepted by the Minister under subsection (1) on account of the particular amount at the particular time.

Technical Notes: New subsection 220.1(1) of the Act permits an individual to elect, on giving security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue, to defer payment of an amount of tax that is owing as a result of the deemed disposition of a particular property in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. If such an election is made, interest and penalties do not accrue on the particular amount secured until such time as the amount becomes unsecured.

If the Minister should determine, at any time, that the security accepted under subsection 220.1(1) is not adequate to secure the particular amount for which it was furnished by the individual, new subsection 220.1(4) provides that the security secures the part of the particular amount for which it is adequate security at that particular time; the balance of the particular amount is unsecured. The Minister is required to notify the individual in writing if part of the particular amount becomes unsecured in this manner, and the individual has the opportunity to furnish further security to the Minister within 90 days of being so notified. Where additional security is so furnished, the Minister is deemed to have accepted it in accordance with subsection 220.1(1).

New subsection 220.1(4) applies after October 1, 1996.

Related Provisions: 220.1(5) — Extension of 90-day period under (4)(b).

(5) Extension of time — If in the opinion of the Minister it would be just and equitable to do so, the Minister may at any time extend

(a) the time for making an election under subsection (1);

(b) the time for furnishing and accepting security under this section; or

(c) the 90-day period for the acceptance of security under paragraph (4)(b).

Technical Notes: New subsection 220.1(1) of the Act permits an individual to elect, on giving security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue, to defer payment of an amount of tax that is owing as a result of the deemed disposition of a particular property in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. This election must be made, and the security furnished, on or before the balance-due date for the taxation year that the individual ceased to be a resident of Canada. Subsection 220.1(4) permits an individual to furnish additional security to the Minister, where the Minister has notified the individual that security previously furnished is no longer adequate. The additional security must be so furnished within 90 days of the Minister's notification.

New subsection 220.1(5) permits the Minister to extend the time available to an individual to make an election or to furnish security under subsection 220.1(1), or to furnish additional security under subsection 220.1(4), where the Minister considers it just and equitable to do so.

New subsection 220.1(5) applies after October 1, 1996.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 27, will add s. 220.1, subsecs. 220.1(1) and (2) applicable to dispositions and distributions that occur at any time after October 1, 1996 except that, if an individual ceased to be resident in Canada, or a distribution occurred to which parag. 220.2(1)(a) applies in respect of the trust, before the particular day on which this Act is assented to,

(a) an election by the individual under subsec. 220.1(1) in respect of the taxation year that includes that time is deemed to have been made in a timely manner if it is made before the end of the third month following the month that includes the particular day; and

(b) adequate security furnished by or on behalf of the individual under subsec. 220.1(1), or by the trust under subsec. 220.2(1), as the case may be, as amended, is deemed to have been furnished in a timely manner if it is furnished before the end of the third month following the month that includes the particular day.

Subsecs. 220.1(2) to (5) apply after October 1, 1996.

Proposed Addition — 220.2

220.2 (1) Security for tax on distributions of taxable Canadian property to non-resident beneficiaries — Where

(a) only because of the application of subsection 107(5), paragraphs 107(2)(a) to (c) do not apply to a distribution by a trust in a particular taxation year (in this section referred to as the trust's "distribution year") of taxable Canadian property, and

(b) the trust elects, in prescribed manner on or before the trust's balance-due day for the distribution year, that this section apply in respect of the distribution year, the following rules apply:

(c) the Minister shall, until the trust's balance-due day for a subsequent taxation year, accept adequate security furnished by or on behalf of the trust on or before the trust's balance-due day for the distribution year for the lesser of

(i) the total amount of taxes under Parts I and I.1

(A) that would be payable by the trust for the distribution year if the exclusion or deduction of each amount referred to in paragraph 161(7)(a) were not taken into account, but

(B) that would not have been so payable if the rules in subsection 107(2) (other than the election referred to in that subsection) had applied to each distribution by the trust in the distribution year of property (other than property subsequently disposed of before the beginning of the subsequent year) to which paragraph (a) applies, and

(ii) where the subsequent year does not immediately follow the distribution year, the amount determined under this paragraph in respect of the trust for the taxation year that immediately precedes the subsequent year; and

(d) except for the purposes of subsections 161(2), (4) and (4.01), interest is payable as if the particular amount for which adequate security has been accepted under this subsection were, for the period ending on the trust's balance-due day for the subsequent year and throughout which the security is accepted by the Minister, an amount paid by the trust on account of the particular amount.

Technical Notes: New section 220.2 of the Act permits a trust to elect, on the giving of security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue, to defer payment of an amount of tax that it owes as a result of the distribution of a taxable Canadian property to a non-resident beneficiary. If such an election is made, interest and penalties do not start to accrue on the amount secured until such time as the amount becomes unsecured. Section 220.2 is structured in a similar manner to new section 220.1.

Section 220.2 applies where such a distribution is made and, only because of subsection 107(5), the rollover paragraphs 107(2)(a) to (c) do not apply to the distribution. Provided that the trust makes an election on or before the trust's balance-due day for the distribution year (or at a later time permitted under subsection 220.2(4)) and furnishes security before that balance-due day (or at a later time permitted under subsection 220.2(4)), the Minister is required to accept security in respect of each taxation year after the distribution year of an amount up to the amount specified under paragraph 220.2(1)(c) in respect of that subsequent year. The amount is required to be accepted until the balance-due day for that subsequent year.

The amount specified under paragraph 220.2(1)(c) for a particular taxation year of a trust is equal to the lesser of the following two amounts:

- the portion of the trust's total tax payable under Parts I and I.1 (determined without reference to loss carrybacks and other amounts specified under paragraph 161(7)(a)) for the distribution year that would not have been payable if each such distribution of taxable Canadian property (other than taxable Canadian property subsequently disposed of before the beginning of the particular year) had not occurred; and
- where the particular year does not immediately follow the distribution year, the amount so specified for the taxation year of the trust that immediately precedes the particular year.

The relief with regard to arrears interest is provided under new paragraph 220.2(1)(d). This provision provides that interest is generally payable as if the particular amount for which adequate security is accepted at any time under subsection 220.2(2) in a particular period ending on the balance-due day for a taxation year subsequent to the distribution year had actually been paid on account of the trust's taxes under Parts I and I.1 for the distribution year. The particular amount in respect of a period that ends on a trust's balance-due day for a subsequent taxation year cannot exceed the amount specified under paragraph 220.2(1)(c) for the year. In addition, the particular amount is constrained because of the limit under subsection 220.2(2). However, paragraph 220.2(1)(d) does not apply with respect to interest on unpaid tax instalments which is dealt with under new subsection 107(5.1).

Related Provisions: 128.3 — Shares acquired on rollover deemed to be same shares for 220.2; 220.1(2) — Security effective only for tax caused by 107(5); 220.1(3) — Where security proves inadequate; 220.1(4) — Extension of time for making election.

(2) Limit — Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Minister is deemed at any time not to have accepted security under this section in respect of a trust's distribution year for any amount greater than the amount, if any, by which

(a) the total amount of taxes that would be payable by the trust under Parts I and I.1 for the year if the exclusion or deduction of each amount referred to in paragraph 161(7)(a), in respect of which the day determined under paragraph 161(7)(b) is after that time, were not taken into account

(b) the total amount of taxes that would be determined under paragraph (a) if paragraphs 107(2)(a) to (c) had applied to each distribution by the trust in the year of property to which paragraph (1)(a) applies.

Technical Notes: Subsection 220.2(2) limits the amount for which the Minister is considered to have accepted as security under subsection 220.2(1), in order to take into account reductions as of any day, for the purpose of computing arrears interest, in the calculation of taxes under Parts I and I.1 arising from the carryback of losses and similar amounts. The effect of subsection 220.2(2) is to limit the amount of acceptable security as of any day in respect of a trust's tax payable for a distribution year to:

- the total taxes payable by the trust under those Parts for the distribution year, determined without reference to such reductions that occur after that day

MINUS

- the total taxes payable those Parts, determined without reference to such reductions and as if the rollover rules in subsection 107(2) had applied to distributions in the distribution year not covered by those rules only because of subsection 107(5).

(3) Inadequate security — Where it is determined at any particular time that security accepted by the Minister under subsection (1) is not adequate to secure the particular amount for which it was furnished by or on behalf of a trust,

(a) subject to a subsequent application of this subsection, the security shall be considered after the particular time to secure only the amount for which it is adequate security at the particular time;

(b) the Minister shall notify the trust in writing of the determination and shall accept adequate security, for all or any part of the particular amount, furnished by or on behalf of the trust within 90 days after the notification; and

(c) any security accepted in accordance with paragraph (b) is deemed to have been accepted by the Minister under subsection (1) on account of the particular amount at the particular time.

Technical Notes: Subsection 220.2(3) provides rules which apply where security furnished by a trust under subsection 220.2(1) ceases to be adequate. These rules are essentially the same as the rules in subsection 220.1(4). As noted above, subsection 220.2(4) allows for the late filing of elections and the late furnishing of security. Subsection 220.2(4) is essentially the same as subsection 220.1(5).

These amendments apply to distributions that occur after October 1, 1996. However, transitional measures treat elections made, and security furnished, up to three months after Royal Assent as having been made at such time as to maximize the benefits under subsection 220.2(1).

(4) Extension of time — Where in the opinion of the Minister it would be just and equitable to do so, the Minister may at any time extend

(a) the time for making an election under subsection (1);

(b) the time for furnishing and accepting security under this section; or

(c) the 90-day period for the acceptance of the security under paragraph (3)(b).

Technical Notes: See under (3) above.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 27, will add s. 220.2, subsecs. 220.2(2) to (4) applicable after October 1, 1996 except that, if an individual ceased to be resident in Canada, or a distribution occurred to which para. 220.2(1)(a), as amended, applies in respect of the trust, before the particular day on which this Act is assented to,

(a) an election by the trust under subsec. 220.2(2) in respect of the taxation year that includes that time is deemed to have been made in a timely manner if it is made before the end of the third month following the month that includes the particular day; and

(b) adequate security furnished by the trust under subsec. 220.2(1) is deemed to have been furnished in a timely manner if it is furnished before the end of the third month following the month that includes the particular day.

(5.2) Interference with remittance — Where at any time

(a) an amount (in this subsection referred to as the "amount to be remitted") that is deducted or withheld from a payment (in this subsection referred to as the "gross payment") is required by a provision of this Act to be remitted by a particular person on account of the tax of another person,

(b) a secured creditor (as defined in subsection 224(1.3)) in relation to the particular person has influence over the issuance or clearance of the payment of the amount to be remitted, and

(c) the secured creditor, alone or together with another person, exercises that influence for the purpose of

(i) postponing the remittance of the amount to be remitted,

(ii) subordinating the remittance of the amount to be remitted, in favour of the payment of other amounts, or

(iii) causing the amount to be remitted not to be remitted, and the remittance of the amount to be remitted is postponed or subordinated or the amount to be remitted is not remitted, as the case may be,

the secured creditor

(d) is, for the purposes of subsections 135(3) and 153(1), section 215 and this section, deemed to be a person who made the gross payment and is deemed to be a person who deducted or withheld the amount to be remitted from the gross payment,

(e) is, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, jointly and severally liable with the particular person to pay to the Receiver General

(i) all amounts payable by the particular person because of any of subsections 135(3) and 153(1) and section 215 in respect of the gross payment, and

(ii) all amounts payable under this Act by the particular person because of any failure to comply with any of those provisions in respect of the gross payment, and

(f) is entitled to deduct or withhold from any amount paid or credited by the secured creditor to the particular person, or otherwise recover from the particular person, any amount paid under this subsection by the secured creditor in respect of the amount to be remitted.

Technical Notes: New subsection 227(5.2) provides a new rule for imposing joint and several liability on certain secured creditors who interfere with the remittance of source deductions. Under this new rule it need not be established that a secured creditor actually causes or authorizes a payment — which is subject to source deduction — before joint and several liability arises. It is sufficient to show that an amount is deducted at source from a payment (hereafter referred to as a "gross payment") that the secured creditor has influence over the issuance or clearance of that gross payment and that the secured creditor exercises that influence for the purpose of interfering with the remittance of source deductions. Interference may take place by way of postponing a remittance, subordinating a remittance in favour of another payment or simply causing a remittance not to be made.

A typical example is the situation of a financial institution that has influential control over a person and that, in the course of providing banking services to the person (usually in financial difficulty) who is liable to deduct certain amounts from the remuneration of its employees, interferes with the remittance of these deductions by preventing the issuance of, stopping or refusing to clear a remittance cheque made to the Receiver General while issuing, clearing, or honouring other cheques made to suppliers or other creditors. This might be done in order to enhance trade receivables and limit the secured creditor's own risks.

Generally, it is not intended that the refusal of a cheque or other means of payment for lack of sufficient funds or other legitimate banking reasons be regarded as influence that is exercised for the purpose of interfering with the payment of source deductions. However, it is intended that a secured creditor that refuses to extend credit in respect of a source deduction payment and that subsequently extends credit in respect of other similar payments made to another party, be considered as exercising influence for the purpose of interfering with source deductions.

Where the circumstances described in new subsection 227(5.2) exist, the secured creditor will be deemed to have made the payment and will become jointly and severally liable with the person making the gross payment to pay all amounts payable in respect of the gross payment and all amounts payable by that person for the failure to deduct and remit the amounts payable. This will include the amount of tax not remitted, interest, and penalties. However, exceptions to this rule are contained in new subsections 227(5.3) and (5.4). A specific right to recover amounts paid by the secured creditor on behalf of the person making the gross payment is provided in paragraph 227(5.2)(f).

(5.3) Exception where all cheques stopped — Where on a day a secured creditor in relation to a person stops or refuses a cheque or other means of payment or remittance drawn on the secured creditor by the person for an amount to be remitted by the person to the Receiver General, subsection (5.2) does not apply in respect of that stopping or refusal if, throughout the period that begins at the end of that day and ends when the amount is paid to the Receiver General, the creditor stops or refuses all cheques and all other means of payment or remittance drawn on the creditor by the person (other than cheques payable, or other means of payment or remittance, to the Receiver General and other than cheques certified on or before that day).

Technical Notes: New subsections 227(5.3) and (5.4) provide certain exceptions to the joint and several liability rules which apply to secured creditors. Subsection 227(5.3) deals with the case in which a cheque or other means of payment is stopped or refused by the secured creditor. Joint and several liability will not arise in this case if the secured creditor also stops or refuses all other cheques presented and payments made starting immediately after that day, except cheques or payments made to the Receiver General or cheques certified on or before that day. Using the example of the financial institution that stops a remittance cheque (referred to in the commentary on subsection 227(5.2)), no joint and several liability would arise if the financial institution were to stop or refuse (until payment in full of the amount to be paid or remitted) all other cheques made to any other creditor of the person and presented at any time after the day on which it stopped the cheque payable to the Receiver General.

(5.4) Other exceptions — Where subsection (5.2) would, but for this subsection, apply to a secured creditor in relation to a person because the creditor has exercised influence in respect of an amount to be remitted by the person to the Receiver General, that subsection does not apply where

(a) the person does not make any payment or disbursement (other than payments or disbursements to the Receiver General) at and after the time referred to in that subsection until the amount to be remitted is paid to the Receiver General;

(b) the exercise of the influence is only a refusal, or an expression of intention to refuse, to supply to the person any further property or services until a payment for property sold or leased or services rendered to the person is received by the creditor; or

(c) the exercise of the influence is pursuant to a decree, order or judgment of a competent tribunal in Canada.

Technical Notes: Similarly, new subsection 227(5.4) provides relief from joint and several liability where a person does not make any other payment or disbursement at or after the time the secured creditor exercises influence in respect of an amount to be paid or remitted by the person to the Receiver General.

New paragraph 227(5.4)(b) provides, for greater certainty, that a refusal by a secured creditor to continue to supply property or services because of the non-payment for such property or services will not give rise to joint and several liability.

Under new paragraph 227(5.4)(c), court actions such as collection and conservation measures will not be regarded as exercising influence for the purpose of interfering with a remittance. In addition, where a court orders a secured creditor to make a payment in priority to a remittance, the secured creditor will not be regarded as having exercised influence for the purpose of interfering with a remittance.

Application: The December 12, 1995 Notice of Ways and Means Motion would have added subsecs. 227(5.2)–(5.4) as above (and would have numbered what is now 227(5.2) as 227(5.5)), to come into force on Royal Assent. However, these provisions (and the parallel rules in 323.1 of the Excise Tax Act for GST remittances) were dropped in the revised Notice of Ways and Means Motion of March 28, 1996 (Bill C-36 — 1995 Budget bill). Officials at the Department of Finance advise that implementation of these rules has been deferred following consultations with the banks and other financial institutions, which have promised voluntary compliance. Revenue Canada has been monitoring this compliance in order to make a determination as to whether to proceed with these rules. As of January 1999, Revenue Canada had just reported to the Department of Finance, and a decision was expected shortly.

(a) the amount so paid to the Receiver General in respect of the loan or indebtedness or portion of it, as the case may be, and

(b) the amount that would be payable to the Receiver General under Part XIII if a dividend described in paragraph 212(2)(a) equal in amount to the amount of the loan or indebtedness repaid were paid by the corporation or partnership to the person at the time of the repayment,

Department of Finance news release, February 11, 1999: Authorized Foreign Banks: Income Tax Rules

Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions) Jim Peterson, on behalf of Finance Minister Paul Martin, today tabled in the House of Commons a Notice of Ways and Means Motion that proposes changes to the Income Tax Act as a result of the introduction of legislation that would permit foreign banks to establish specialized, commercially-focused branches in Canada.

"These proposed tax rules were developed in consultation with the industry," Mr. Peterson said. "They will ensure that Canadian branches of foreign banks, Canadian subsidiaries of foreign banks, and domestic banks are all taxed on a similar basis."

The proposed tax rules are described in the attached Notice of Ways and Means Motion and Backgrounder. Legislation to implement the rules will be included in a Bill and tabled in Parliament at an early opportunity. The measures described in the proposals will come into force at the same time as the foreign bank entry legislation introduced today.

BACKGROUNDER

In February 1997, the Secretary of State for International Financial Institutions announced that a new foreign bank entry regime would be implemented to allow foreign banks to carry on business in Canada through branch offices. Currently, a non-resident bank must incorporate a Canadian subsidiary if it wishes to carry on business in Canada.

The proposed Income Tax Act changes announced today were developed in consultation with representatives of both domestic and foreign banks, and are intended to place these new Canadian branches of foreign banks in a comparable tax position to Canadian resident banks ("Canadian banks"). In other respects, it is anticipated that Canadian branches of foreign banks will generally be subject to the same provisions of that Act as Canadian banks.

The proposed changes are described in more detail below. Any references to the Bank Act include the proposed amendments included in the Bill introduced today to permit foreign banks to establish branches in Canada. In all cases, the changes will apply on and after the day that subsection 35(1) of that Bill comes into force.

Definition

It is proposed that the term "authorized foreign bank" used in the Bank Act be adopted in the Income Tax Act by reference to the definition in the Bank Act.

Transfer of Loans and Other Assets

Under the Income Tax Act, transfers of loans and other assets between non-arm's length corporations are generally treated as occurring at fair market value. Special rules may also apply to defer the recognition of losses until an asset is transferred to an arm's length party.

A foreign bank may have some discretion in deciding whether to hold specific assets in Canada or in its home jurisdiction. Moreover, the assets of the foreign bank may be transferred between the home jurisdiction and Canada. As the Canadian branch of a foreign bank and its home office are not separate legal entities, new rules are proposed to ensure that transfers of assets between the Canadian branch and its home office are taxed in the same manner as other non-arm's length transfers. The new rules deem such transfers to occur at fair market value, subject to the existing loss deferral rules that prevent the premature realization of losses.

[For other proposals, see under 18(5), 20(1)(c), 126(2), 153(1), 181.3(3), 190.13, 212(1)(b) and 219(1) — ed.]

Department of Finance news release, May 11, 1999: Changes Proposed to Tax Rules relating to the Conversion of Foreign Bank Subsidiaries into Foreign Bank Branches

Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions) Jim Peterson today announced proposals to change the Income Tax Act to allow special transitional tax rules for foreign banks that establish specialized, commercially focused branches in Canada.

"We are proposing these time-limited, special tax rules to make sure there are no unwarranted impediments to foreign banks that choose to pursue the branching option now being considered by Parliament," Mr. Peterson said. "The foreign bank entry bill, Bill C-67, is intended to sustain and encourage healthy competition in the Canadian financial marketplace, and these tax changes will help that happen."

Foreign banks have historically been required to establish their Canadian operations in the form of Canadian subsidiaries. However, the government has now introduced Bill C-67 to allow foreign banks to operate in the form of branches that will be limited to specific, commercially focused activities.

Under current tax rules, a foreign bank subsidiary that opts to restructure itself as a branch office under Bill C-67 could face a number of significant potential tax liabilities. This could discourage foreign banks currently operating in Canada from pursuing the branching option.

The proposed Income Tax Act changes will allow a foreign bank to transfer existing assets and associated tax liabilities of its Canadian banking or trust subsidiary to a newly established branch. This transfer will be allowed to take place, for a limited time, without accelerating certain tax liabilities. Also, where the subsidiary is wound up, the changes will allow the foreign bank to use certain of its former Canadian subsidiary's tax losses.

These transition measures will be available only to foreign banks that carried on business in Canada through a bank or trust company subsidiary prior to the tabling of Bill C-67.

The proposed transitional rules are described in the attached backgrounder. Legislation to implement the rules will be included in a Bill and tabled in Parliament at an early opportunity. The transition measures are intended to come into force at the same time as the proposed foreign bank entry legislation.

Backgrounder

In February 1997, the Honourable Jim Peterson, Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions), announced that a new foreign bank entry regime would be implemented to allow foreign banks to carry on business in Canada through branch offices. This change is expected to enhance competition in the Canadian financial services market. Currently, a non-resident bank must establish a Canadian bank subsidiary or trust company (referred to generally as "subsidiaries") if it wishes to carry on business in Canada.

On February 11, 1999, legislation to implement the new foreign bank entry regime was tabled in the House of Commons as Bill C-67. On the same day, a Notice of Ways and Means Motion was tabled describing the Income Tax Act changes to be implemented as a consequence of Bill C-67, to ensure that the new Canadian branches of foreign banks are in a comparable tax position to Canadian resident banks.

It is anticipated that a number of existing foreign banks will wish to convert their subsidiaries to Canadian branch offices. As foreign banks were not permitted to establish their Canadian banking businesses as branch offices in the past, special tax provisions, for a limited time, are being proposed to both enable subsidiaries to convert to branch offices and ensure they will not incur an undue tax liability. In the absence of these changes, the foreign banks could incur significant tax costs in converting their subsidiaries to branch offices, which in turn would act as an impediment to their utilizing the branch option that is being made available to them.

The proposed measures defer the recognition of a subsidiary's tax liability in respect of certain assets. However, they do not forgive any outstanding, or accruing, tax liability of the subsidiary. For example, any accrued gain on property transferred to a branch will be inherited by the branch, and will be subject to tax when the branch disposes of the property or ceases to use it in its Canadian banking business. These transition tax rules will be time-limited and will apply only to foreign banks that carried on a banking business in Canada through a subsidiary prior to the passage of Bill C-67.

The proposed changes are described in more detail below. Any references to the Bank Act include the amendments proposed in Bill C-67. In all cases, the changes will apply as of the day that Bill C-67 comes into force.

Proposed Relief

The proposed changes address three specific tax consequences of converting a subsidiary to a non-resident branch office under the current law.

a) — Gains on Property of Subsidiary

The first change relates to the taxation of accrued gains in respect of property owned by a subsidiary. Ordinarily, when a subsidiary transfers property to a branch office of its non- resident parent corporation, the property is treated as having been sold to the non-resident corporation at fair market value. This may give rise to income or a capital gain, and tax may be payable by the subsidiary.

It is proposed that a foreign bank be permitted to elect, on a property-by-property basis, to transfer property from its subsidiary to its new Canadian branch office on a tax- deferred basis. Properties eligible for this election will be those properties used in carrying on the subsidiary's banking business in Canada that would be eligible for transfer under section 85 of the Income Tax Act, if that section applied in respect of the transfer. As a consequence of making the election, the subsidiary's proceeds of disposition in respect of an elected property and the branch office's cost of the property will be equal to the amount that would be the subsidiary's proceeds of disposition in respect of the property had section 85 of the Income Tax Act applied. Where the elected property is depreciable property, any latent or future recapture will retain that character to the branch.

This approach will enable the subsidiary to defer any recapture or accrued gains in respect of elected properties or, where the subsidiary wishes to use accrued losses or loss carryovers, to realize only that portion of its gains that may be offset by the losses.

b) — Retained Earnings of Subsidiary

The second change relates to the taxation of the subsidiary's retained earnings. If a subsidiary distributes retained earnings to the branch office of a non-resident corporation, Part XIII withholding tax would generally be payable on the distribution. Moreover, if a subsidiary winds up into its non-resident parent, it is deemed under the Income Tax Act to have distributed a dividend to its shareholders equal to the difference between the value of property distributed on the winding-up and the paid-up capital of the subsidiary's redeemed shares. The deemed dividend is also subject to withholding tax under Part XIII of the Act. Consequently, a foreign bank that converts its subsidiary to a branch office could be subject to withholding tax on the subsidiary's retained earnings.

It is proposed that a subsidiary be permitted to transfer all or part of its retained earnings on a tax-deferred basis to a Canadian branch office of its foreign parent bank. For the purposes of the "branch tax" imposed under Part XIV of the Income Tax Act, the transferred amount would be treated as having been claimed by the foreign bank as its "investment allowance" for a notional year preceding the branch's first year of operation in Canada. The tax deferral in respect of the subsidiary's retained earnings would thereby be maintained only as long as the branch continues to employ those earnings in the Canadian business of the foreign bank.

Accumulated Losses of Subsidiary

The third change relates to the treatment of the subsidiary's accumulated tax losses. A corporation that incurs losses in a taxation year may generally deduct those losses in computing its taxable income in subsequent taxation years. However, losses may only be deducted by the taxpayer that incurs them and may not be transferred for use by other taxpayers, including related corporations. Thus, a subsidiary would not ordinarily be able to transfer its tax losses to a Canadian branch office.

It is proposed that a foreign bank be able to deduct the net capital and non-capital losses of its subsidiary in computing the taxable income of its Canadian branch office, in circumstances where the foreign bank has wound up the subsidiary as a consequence of transferring the subsidiary's business to the branch office. This would be accomplished by treating the Canadian branch office as having incurred losses equal to the losses of the wound-up subsidiary, in the year in which the subsidiary incurred them.

Who Qualifies for Relief?

The proposed new rules will apply to foreign banks that carried on a banking business in Canada through a federally regulated bank or trust company on the day that Bill C-67 was introduced in Parliament.

When is Relief Available?

The proposed relief will be available on a time-limited basis. To qualify for relief, a foreign bank must establish

a) that it complied, on or before December 31, 2000, with paragraphs 1.0(1.1)(b) and (c) of the draft "Guide to Foreign Bank Branching" issued by the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, in respect of establishing and operating a bank branch in Canada, and

b) that it completed the transaction in respect of which the relief is sought on or before the earlier of

Proposed Addition — 248(1)"disposition"

"disposition" of any property, except as expressly otherwise provided, includes

(a) any transaction or event entitling a taxpayer to proceeds of disposition of the property,

(b) any transaction or event by which,

(i) where the property is a share, bond, debenture, note, certificate, mortgage, agreement of sale or similar property, or an interest therein, the property is redeemed in whole or in part or is cancelled,

(ii) where the property is a debt or any other right to receive an amount, the debt or other right is settled or cancelled,

(iii) where the property is a share, the share is converted because of an amalgamation or merger, and

(iv) where the property is an option to acquire or dispose of property, the option expires,

(c) any transfer of the property to a trust or, where the property is property of a trust, any transfer of the property to any beneficiary under the trust, except as provided by paragraphs (e) and (f), and

(d) where the property is a beneficiary's capital interest or a part thereof in a trust, except as provided by paragraph (g), a payment after 1999 to the beneficiary of the trust's capital that can reasonably be considered to be

(i) in respect of that property, and

(ii) to have been made because of the beneficiary's capital interest in the trust,

but does not include

(e) any transfer of the property as a consequence of which there is a change in the legal ownership of the property that does not result in any change in the beneficial ownership of the property, where

(i) unless the transfer is from one trust to another, it is reasonable to consider that a trust acts as agent in respect of the property it receives or transfers, as the case may be,

(ii) if the transfer is from one trust to another, each trust can reasonably be considered to act as agent for the same beneficiary or beneficiaries with respect to the property transferred, and

(iii) except where the Minister is satisfied that the transfer will not jeopardize the collection of taxes payable under this Act and so advises the transferor in writing, the transfer is not from either a person resident in Canada or a partnership (other than a partnership each member of which is non-resident) to a non-resident trust,

(f) any transfer of the property as a consequence of which there is a change in the legal ownership of the property that does not result in any change in the beneficial ownership of the property, where

(i) the transferor and the transferee are trusts,

(ii) the transfer is not by a trust resident in Canada to a non-resident trust,

(iii) the transferor cannot reasonably be considered to act as agent for its beneficiaries with respect to the property transferred,

(iv) the transferee held no property immediately before the transfer,

(v) the transferor held no property immediately after the transfer, and

(vi) neither the transferor nor transferee is described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1),

(g) where the property is part of a capital interest of a taxpayer in a trust (other than a trust that would be non-resident if this Act were read without reference to subparagraph 94(1)(c)(i)) that is described by reference to units issued by the trust, a distribution after 1999 of money that is legal tender in Canada from the trust's capital (other than any portion in respect of which paragraph (a) of the definition "eligible offset" in subsection 108(1) applies) where the number of units in the trust that are owned by the taxpayer is not reduced because of the distribution,

(h) any transfer of the property for the purpose only of securing a debt or a loan, or any transfer by a creditor for the purpose only of returning property that had been used as security for a debt or a loan,

(i) any issue of a bond, debenture, note, certificate or mortgage, and

(j) any issue by a corporation of a share of its capital stock, or any other transaction that, but for this paragraph, would be a disposition by a corporation of a share of its capital stock;

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), subsec. 18(2), will add the definition "disposition" to subsec. 248(1), applicable to transactions and events that occur after December 23, 1998.

Technical Notes: The proposed new definition of "disposition" in subsection 248(1) of the Act replaces a definition of the same expression in section 54. The proposed new definition applies for the purposes of the entire Act.

The table below briefly compares the new definition with the former definition, with further detail provided below with regard to the policy changes introduced by the new definition. The first column and second column indicate paragraph references in the new definition and the former definition, respectively.

New	Old	Description
(a)	(a)	Disposition of property by a taxpayer includes transaction or event entitling taxpayer to proceeds. No policy change.
(b)	(b)	Specified redemptions, cancellations, conversions and expirations of debt, equity and options treated as dispositions. No policy change.
(c)	(c)	Except as otherwise specified, dispositions include transfers to and from trusts. No policy change.
(d) and (g)	N/A	Circumstances in which distribution by a trust constitutes disposition of a capital interest in a trust. See description of new definition below.
(e) and (f)	(e)	Circumstances in which a transfer not a "disposition" because no change in beneficial ownership. Under new rules, these circumstances are narrower. See description of new definition below.
(h)	(d)	Transfer to secure debt not disposition. No change in policy.
(i)	(f)	Issue of debt not disposition. No change in policy.
(j)	(g)	Issue of share not disposition. No change in policy.

Paragraph (d) of the new definition applies with respect to capital interests in trust. Paragraph (d) makes it clear that, except as specifically provided in paragraph (g), every payment (in kind or otherwise) by a trust to a taxpayer in respect of the taxpayer's capital interest (as defined in subsection 108(1)) in the trust will result in a disposition of all or part of the taxpayer's capital interest in the trust. The exception under paragraph (g) applies after 1999 with respect to a payment where the following conditions are satisfied:

1. the trust is resident in Canada (and is not a trust that is deemed by section 94 to be resident in Canada),
2. the payment is made by way of money that is legal tender in Canada,
3. the capital interest in the trust is described by reference to units issued by the trust,
4. the payment is a distribution from trust capital (other than a distribution which gives rise to an "eligible offset" under paragraph (a) of the new definition "eligible offset" in subsection 108(1)), and
5. the payment does not result in a reduction of the number of units in the trust owned by the taxpayer.

The exclusion under the fourth condition, for distributions in respect of "eligible offsets", results in any payment in satisfaction of a right to enforce payments out of the income or unrecognized gains balance of a trust being treated as disposition of an interest in the trust.

Paragraphs (d) and (g) are part of a set of amendments designed to clarify the tax consequences of distributions from trusts to their beneficiaries after 1999. For the large part, the end results achieved under these rules are intended to accord with existing income tax practice. See the notes on new subsection 43(2) for references to further related amendments.

Paragraph (e) of the new definition provides that a transfer of property is not a disposition where it does not involve a change in the beneficial ownership of the property, if three conditions are satisfied. In the event that these conditions are not satisfied, the transfer will generally be a "qualifying disposition" under new subsection 107.4(1), unless paragraph (f) applies. Where the transfer is a disposition and no other provision in the Act applies, amended subsections 69(1) and 251(1) generally ensure that the transfer occurs at fair market value.

The first of these conditions (subparagraph (e)(i)) applies only where the transferor or the transferee is a trust, but not where both are trusts. In these circumstances, in order to avoid characterization as a "disposition", it must be reasonable to consider that the trust receives or transfers the property in its capacity as agent.

The second condition (subparagraph (e)(ii)) applies only where both the transferor and transferee are trusts. To avoid characterization as a "disposition", the transferor and transferee must each act as agents for the same beneficiary or beneficiaries with respect to the property transferred.

The third condition (subparagraph (e)(iii)) is that, to avoid characterization as a disposition, the transferee generally cannot be a non-resident trust if the transfer is from a person resident in Canada or a partnership (other than a partnership each member of which is non-resident). An exception in this regard is made where the Minister is satisfied that the transfer will not jeopardize the collection of taxes payable and so advises the transferor in writing. Where a transfer is a disposition as a consequence of this condition, new subsection 248(25.1) provides that the transferee trust is deemed to be a person separate from the transferor.

Paragraph (f) of the new definition avoids a disposition in the case of certain very simple trust-to-trust transfers. Where this paragraph applies, new subsection 248(25.2) provides that the transferee trust is deemed to be the same trust as, and a continuation of, the transferor trust. One of the results of subsection 248(25.2) is that the transferee trust will have access to deductions from certain tax pools (e.g., undepreciated capital cost, resource expense pools) generated by the transferor trust. Where the paragraph does not apply, the transfer will generally be a "qualifying disposition" under new subsection 107.4(1). For this paragraph to apply, the following additional conditions must be satisfied:

- there cannot be any change in the beneficial ownership of the property because of the transfer,
- the transfer cannot be from a trust resident in Canada to a non-resident trust,
- the transferor cannot reasonably be considered to act as agent for its beneficiaries with respect to the property transferred,
- the transferee can hold no property immediately before the transfer,
- the transferor can hold no property immediately after the transfer, and
- neither the transferor nor the transferee is described in any of paragraphs (a) to (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1).

Except as indicated otherwise above, these amendments apply to transactions and events that occur after December 23, 1998.

Proposed Amendment — Income inclusion on conversion of U.S. IRA

Department of Finance news release, December 18, 1998: Qualified RRSP Investments and IRAs

Finance Minister Paul Martin today announced that he will propose changes to the Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Regulations to address two issues that have been recently raised with the Department of Finance, in the context of retirement savings decisions currently being made by individuals.

[For the first measure, see Proposed Amendment under Reg. 4900(1) — ed.]

The second issue deals with individual retirement accounts (IRAs) established under the United States Internal Revenue Code. The Minister announced that he will propose an amendment to the Income Tax Act in response to recent changes to the Code relating to IRAs.

The changes to the Code have established a new type of IRA, known as a Roth IRA. Under the Code, contributions to a Roth IRA are not deductible, but investment income accrues tax-free and distributions are generally not taxable. Under certain circumstances, an individual may convert an ordinary IRA into a Roth IRA, but is required to include in computing income for the year of conversion the value of the ordinary IRA at the time of conversion. If the conversion is made in 1998, the income inclusion may be spread out over a four-year period.

The proposed amendment to the Act would affect Canadian residents who convert ordinary IRAs into Roth IRAs. It would require that the individual include in income for Canadian tax purposes any amount that must be included in income for U.S. tax purposes. This would ensure that the conversion amount is taxed in Canada, even where the IRA is converted simply by amending its terms. It would also ensure that the amount and timing of the inclusion in Canada matches the amount and timing in the U.S., thus allowing individuals to maximize the use of U.S. taxes paid on conversion as foreign tax credits in computing Canadian income tax payable.

Mr. Martin noted that the deferral opportunities in the U.S. for Roth IRAs are far more generous than the deferral opportunities in the U.S. for ordinary IRAs and the deferral opportunities in Canada for tax-assisted retirement savings. In particular, contributions can be made to a Roth IRA at any age, and there is no requirement for payments under a Roth IRA to begin by a certain age. Accordingly, there are no plans to provide tax assistance by way of an exemption from or deferral of taxation in Canada on earnings within a Roth IRA.

Proposed Amendment — 248(1)"personal trust"

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), subsec. 18(1), will repeal the portion of the definition "personal trust" in subsec. 248(1) after subpara. (b)(ii), applicable after December 23, 1998.

Technical Notes: A "personal trust" is essentially defined in subsection 248(1) of the Act as a testamentary trust or an inter vivos trust in which no beneficial interest was acquired for consideration payable to the trust or to a contributor to the trust. A special rule within the definition generally ensures that one person (or two or more related persons) can make contributions to a trust and retain an interest under the trust without the prohibition on consideration being considered to apply. This special rule also applies for the purposes of paragraph 53(2)(h), which deals with the calculation of the adjusted cost bases of certain trust interests.

The definition is amended so that this special rule is removed from the definition. Instead, the special rule is now provided in new subsection 108(7). The special rule also is to apply, under subsection 108(7), for the purposes of amended subsections 106(1.1) and 107(1) and (1.1), strictly as a consequence of the amendments to those provisions.

The amendment to the definition "personal trust", and new subsection 108(7), apply after December 23, 1998.

Related Provisions: 108(7) — Meaning of "acquired for consideration"; 110.6(16) — Extension of definition for purposes of capital gains exemption.

History: All that portion of para. (b) of "personal trust" following subpara. (ii) amended by 1994, c. 7, Sch. VIII (1993, c. 24), subsec. 139(4), applicable after 1987. That portion formerly read:

> and, for the purposes of this paragraph and paragraph 53(2)(h), where an inter vivos trust is created by way of the transfer, assignment or other disposition of property by an individual (or two or more individuals each of whom was, at the time the trust was created, related to each of the other individuals), any beneficial interest in the trust acquired by the individual, or individuals, at the time the trust was created shall be deemed to have been acquired for no consideration;

Proposed Amendment — Revenue Canada administration

Revenue Canada news release, March 10, 1999: Federal plan moving ahead to improve incentives for SR&ED

Revenue Canada's action plan to improve its Scientific Research and Experimental Development (SR&ED) program is moving to full implementation, the Honourable Herb Dhaliwal, Minister of National Revenue and MP (Vancouver South-Burnaby) reported today.

"Our progress to date shows the strong commitment of my department and the Government of Canada to making the federal incentive program for industrial research and development fair, friendly, and client-centred," Mr. Dhaliwal said. "One of my key objectives as Minister of National Revenue is to make sure that this action plan for research and development becomes a reality."

Mr. Dhaliwal outlined a number of developments which illustrate the progress made since the action plan was announced in November, 1998.

In less than one year, the backlog of SR&ED claims has been reduced by two-thirds. As part of the plan's objective to make the SR&ED program more client centred, Revenue Canada has named account executives to work with research-intensive companies in Vancouver and Ottawa. Also, the Department has made a preclaim review of research projects available in six Canadian cities. These reviews will be extended to all parts of Canada within the next year. Eleven representatives from technology-based industries have been named to a national steering committee that meets regularly to oversee the implementation of the action plan. Joint training has started in the aerospace industry and is planned for other industries. Revenue Canada has released a publication called A Guide to Conducting a Technical Review. This publication has been released to the field and is being circulated for consultation. Sector committees have been formed in 11 industries, including automotive, pharmaceuticals, software, oil and gas, communications, and chemicals. These committees will clarify eligibility issues and develop interpretation guidelines for the federal SR&ED tax incentives. In April, Revenue Canada expects to process almost all SR&ED claims within 120 days.

In addition, Mr. Dhaliwal confirmed that the Department will have an independent SR&ED directorate separate from other tax audit activities. The directorate will manage a program that channels about $1.3 billion into industrial research and development in Canada every year.

The Director General of this new SR&ED program directorate is Norine Heselton, Vice-President, Policy, Information Technology Association of Canada, who joined Revenue Canada on an executive interchange in January. Ms. Heselton is a former telecommunications executive and a past chair of the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 28, will amend the definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsec. 248(1) to read as above, applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Section 248 of the Act defines a number of terms that apply for the purposes of the Act, and sets out various rules relating to the interpretation and application of various provisions of the Act.

One of the key concepts in the Act is the concept of "taxable Canadian property." The term is used for a variety of purposes, mostly but not exclusively to do with the taxation of non-residents and migrants. The scope and functions of the term are, however, less than fully clear, in part because the Act currently includes two definitions. The main definition, in subsection 115(1) of the Act, appears to apply for all purposes of the Act. A second definition, however, is provided in subsection 248(1) of the Act. This second definition both confirms the meaning assigned in subsection 115(1) and provides an extended meaning for certain limited purposes.

To clarify the meaning of "taxable Canadian property" and to simplify the Act, the definition in subsection 248(1) of the Act is made the only one, and the substance of the existing subsection 115(1) definition is incorporated into it. In addition, certain changes are made to the definition to reflect its policy basis and to harmonize its components.

Under this new single definition, taxable Canadian property of a taxpayer at any time in a taxation year includes property of the taxpayer that is:

(a) real property in Canada,

(b) property used by the taxpayer in carrying on a business in Canada, other than

(i) property used in carrying on an insurance business, and

(ii) where the taxpayer is non-resident, ships and aircraft used principally in international traffic and related personal property, if the country in which the taxpayer is resident does not tax the gains of persons resident in Canada from dispositions of such property,

(c) if the taxpayer is an insurer, its designated insurance property for the year,

(d) unlisted shares of Canadian-resident corporations (other than a mutual fund corporations),

(e) unlisted shares of non-resident corporations if, at any time during the 60-month (currently 12-month) period that ends at that time, the value of the company's Canadian real and resource properties made up more than half the fair market value of all of its properties, and more than half of the fair market value of the share was derived directly or indirectly from such properties,

(f) listed shares that would be described in paragraph (d) or (e) if they were unlisted, or shares of a mutual fund corporation, if at any time during the 60-month period that ends at that time the taxpayer and non-arm's length persons owned 25% or more of the issued shares of any class of the capital stock of the corporation,

(g) certain partnership interests, if at any time in the 60-month (currently 12-month) period that ends at the time, most of the partnership's value is attributable to Canadian property,

(h) capital interests in trusts (other than unit trusts) that are resident in Canada,

(i) units of unit trusts (other than mutual fund trusts) that are resident in Canada,

(j) units of a mutual fund trust if, at any time during the 60-month period that ends at that time, not less than 25% of the units of the trust belonged to the taxpayer and non-arm's length persons,

(k) interests in a non-resident trust if, at any particular time during the 60-month (currently 12-month) period that ends at that time, the trust met a test comparable to the one described in respect of a non-resident corporation in (e) above, and

(l) property deemed by any provision of the Act to be taxable Canadian property.

In addition to listing the above types of property, the new definition includes three special rules. First, a property described in the list is deemed to include any interest in or option in respect of the property, whether or not the property actually exists. Second, the extended meaning of "taxable Canadian property, which now applies for the purposes of sections 2, 128.1 and 150, and for the purpose of applying paragraphs 85(1)(i) and 97(2)(c) to a disposition by a non-resident person, is preserved. That extended meaning includes in "taxable Canadian property" Canadian resource properties, timber resource properties, income interests in trusts resident in Canada, rights to a share of the income or loss under an agreement referred to in paragraph 96(1.1)(a), and life insurance policies in Canada. Third, the exclusion from "taxable Canadian property" of certain shares of non-resident-owned investment corporations, currently found in the subsection 115(2) definition, is preserved in the new one.

(b) the total of all amounts each of which is a capital loss of the trust for the year from a disposition of property;

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), subsec. 18(2), will add the definition "unrecognized gains balance" to subsec. 248(1), applicable after February 20, 1990.

Technical Notes: The new definition "unrecognized gains balance" in subsection 248(1) of the Act is introduced as a consequence of new subsection 43(2), the new definition "eligible offset" in subsection 108(1) and amended subsection 132(7).

A trust's "unrecognized gains balance" for a taxation year is 1/4 of the amount, if any, by which the trust's capital gains for the year from the disposition of property exceed the trust's capital losses for the year from the disposition of property. This balance represents the portion of a trust's net capital gains for a taxation year that is not included in computing the income of the trust for the year.

Proposed Addition — 248(25.1), (25.2)

(25.1) Where transfer to bare trust is disposition — Where there is a disposition of property to a trust that would, if the definition "disposition" in subsection (1) were read without reference to subparagraph (e)(iii), not be a disposition of the property, the transferee is deemed

(a) to have received the property solely in its capacity as a trust; and

(b) not to hold the property as an agent for the transferor nor, where the transferor is a trust, as an agent for beneficiaries under the transferee.

Related Provisions: 108(1) — Definition of "capital interest"; 223.2(4) — Disclosure of transfer to Revenue Canada.

(25.2) Trust-to-trust transfers — Where there is a transfer of property from a particular trust to another trust, the transfer is not a disposition and the transfer would be a disposition if the definition "disposition" in subsection (1) were read without reference to paragraph (f), without affecting the personal liabilities of the trustees of either trust under this Act the other trust is after the transfer deemed to be the same trust as, and a continuation of, the particular trust.

Related Provisions: 104(5.8) — Transfers between trusts; 248(1)"disposition"(c) — Disposition incudes transfer to a trust.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), subsec. 18(3), will add subsecs. 248(25.1) and (25.2), applicable to dispositions and transfers that occur after December 23, 1998.

Technical Notes: New subsection 248(25.1) of the Act applies where there is a transfer after December 23, 1998 of a property to a bare trust that, because subparagraph (e)(iii) of the definition

"disposition" in subsection 248(1) does not apply, constitutes a disposition of the property. Subsection 248(25.1) ensures that, in these circumstances, the transferor and transferee will be treated as separate taxpayers.

For more detail, see the notes above on the definition "disposition".

[New subsection 248(25.2)], which applies to trust-to-trust transfers after December 23, 1998, is explained in the notes above on paragraph (f) of the new definition "disposition" in subsection 248(1) of the Act.

(a) as consideration for any property acquired by the debtor or services rendered to the debtor, or

(b) that is deductible in computing the debtor's income, for the purposes of applying the provisions of this Act relating to the treatment of the debtor in respect of the liability, the liability shall be considered to be an obligation, issued at that time by the debtor, that has a principal amount at that time equal to the amount of the liability at that time.

History: Subsec. 248(26) added by 1995, c. 21, subsec. 43(3), applicable to taxation years that end after February 21, 1994.

(27) Parts of debt obligations — For greater certainty,

(a) unless the context requires otherwise, an obligation issued by a debtor includes any part of a larger obligation that was issued by the debtor;

(b) the principal amount of that part shall be considered to be the portion of the principal amount of that larger obligation that relates to that part; and

(c) the amount for which that part was issued shall be considered to be the portion of the amount for which that larger obligation was issued that relates to that part.

Related Provisions: 43 — Partial disposition of capital property; 142.4(9) — Partial disposition of specified debt obligation by financial institution.

History: Subsec. 248(27) added by 1995, c. 21, subsec. 43(3), applicable to taxation years that end after February 21, 1994.

(28) Limitation respecting inclusions, deductions and tax credits — Unless a contrary intention is evident, no provision of this Act shall be read or construed

(a) to require the inclusion or permit the deduction, either directly or indirectly, in computing a taxpayer's income, taxable income or taxable income earned in Canada, for a taxation year or in computing a taxpayer's income or loss for a taxation year from a particular source or from sources in a particular place, of any amount to the extent that the amount has already been directly or indirectly included or deducted, as the case may be, in computing such income, taxable income, taxable income earned in Canada or loss, for the year or any preceding taxation year;

(b) to permit the deduction, either directly or indirectly, in computing a taxpayer's tax payable under any Part of this Act for a taxation year of any amount to the extent that the amount has already been directly or indirectly deducted in computing such tax payable for the year or any preceding taxation year; or

(c) to consider an amount to have been paid on account of a taxpayer's tax payable under any Part of this Act for a taxation year to the extent that the amount has already been considered to have been paid on account of such tax payable for the year or any preceding taxation year.

Proposed Amendment — Restriction to Meaning of Carrying on Business in Canada

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 16, 1999: Non-resident investment funds that engage Canadian service providers

(18) That, for the 1999 and subsequent taxation years, a nonresident investment fund not be considered to be carrying on business in Canada in a taxation year solely by reason of engaging a corporation or trust resident in Canada or a Canadian partnership (the "service provider") to provide designated services in relation to investments in securities if

(a) the fund has not, directly or through its agents, directed any promotion of investments in the fund principally at, or sold such investments to, persons that the fund knew or ought to have known after reasonable enquiry were resident in Canada, and

(b) the fund has not filed any document with a government or public securities regulatory body in Canada in order to permit the distribution of investments in the fund to persons resident in Canada, and either

(c) the service provider deals with the fund and the fund's promoters at arm's length, or

(d) the fund's investment turnover rate for the year is less than 3.

(19) That, for the purposes of the rules described in pargraph (18),

(a) a non-resident investment fund be a non-resident corporation, a non-resident trust or a partnership other than a Canadian partnership

(i) the only undertaking of which is the investing of its funds in property (other than real property in Canada or an interest in real property in Canada), and

(ii) that has at least one class of investment units of which there are no fewer than 150 holders, each of whom holds units of the class with a fair market value of $500 or more,

(b) designated services be

(i) investment management and advice, whether or not the manager has discretionary authority to direct trading,

(ii) securities dealing, and

(iii) investment administration services, namely: custody of securities, calculation and reporting of asset values, executing portfolio transactions and transactions with investors, communication with investors, record keeping, accounting, auditing, and marketing,

(c) the fund's promoter be any person or partnership that initiates or directs the founding, organization or substantial reorganization of the fund, or any person or partnership affiliated with such a person or partnership, and

(d) the investment turnover rate for the fund for a year be equal to the total value of property disposed of by the fund during the year (other than securities redeemed at their maturity and securities redeemed unilaterally by their issuers), less the value of net redemptions of investment units in the fund by investors during the year, all divided by the average value of property held by the fund during the year.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: Non-resident investment funds that engage Canadian service providers

Both in Canada and abroad, millions of individuals have chosen to invest through mutual funds and other collective investment vehicles. The growth of such investment funds has contributed to the expansion of Canada's investment services industry, which provides advice and administrative support to both domestic and foreign funds. Under current tax rules, however, Canadian service providers are concerned that foreign funds which engage them may become taxable in Canada as a result. The budget proposes to clarify the rules to ensure that the Canadian investment services industry is able to compete effectively in international markets.

As a general matter, and subject to any applicable tax treaty, a non-resident is taxable in Canada on any income earned from carrying on business in Canada. However, there is a concern that a non-resident fund may be considered to be carrying on business in Canada, and therefore become taxable here, simply as a result of retaining a Canadian firm to provide investment management or advisory services or to perform certain administrative (so-called "back office") functions.

This concern could make it difficult for Canadian service providers to attract foreign funds as clients. The situation is exacerbated by the fact that the United States and the United Kingdom — both home to significant investment services industries — have statutory rules that specify circumstances in which foreign funds and other foreign investors are not subject to domestic taxation.

The budget proposes that, subject to conditions, a non-resident investment fund will not be considered to be carrying on business in Canada solely by reason of engaging a Canadian firm to provide portfolio management services, dealer services, or back office services in relation to investments in securities. If this rule does not apply to a particular foreign fund, the determination of whether or not the fund is carrying on business in Canada will be made under the existing law.

This rule is not a tax exemption. In cases where the rule applies, the Canadian firms that serve the offshore client will continue to pay tax in Canada on their profits. Likewise, non-resident funds that receive income such as dividends, interest or capital gains from Canadian sources will continue to be subject to Canadian tax under existing provisions.

There are two main conditions to the application of this rule. First, the non- resident fund must not sell units to investors resident in Canada. This will ensure that no incentive is created to serve Canadian investors from offshore, thereby displacing the domestic Canadian fund industry. Second, the fund must establish that it meets at least one of two tests:

(a) the Canadian resident firms that service the fund deal at arm's length with it (and to the extent that such firms are agents of the fund, they are independent agents); or

(b) the fund's annual rate of investment turnover is low.

The requirement that the Canadian service provider be independent of the fund provides assurance that the fund is not carrying on business through its own operations in Canada or those of a related party.

The alternative turnover test is applicable only in cases where the arm's length test is not met. If the rate of turnover of the investments held by the fund is low, it is presumed, for the purposes of this rule only, that the fund's investment activity is primarily passive in nature and does not constitute an active business. The rate of investment turnover is measured annually as the volume of sales of securities by the fund, net of sales required in order to provide cash for net redemptions by unitholders, relative to the average value of securities held by the fund during the year. For the purpose of calculating turnover, sales of securities due to redemption at maturity or unilateral redemption by the issuer will not be counted. The turnover rate will be calculated for all of the fund's investments, Canadian and foreign, regardless of whether or not they are administered in Canada. Subject to consultations, it is proposed that the low turnover threshold will be met if the turnover rate for the year is less than three.

This rule will apply to non-resident funds for the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

(d) the lender's risk of loss or opportunity for gain or profit with respect to the security is not changed in any material respect,

(2) Idem — Where a taxpayer has acquired depreciable property before the beginning of the 1949 taxation year, for the purposes of section 13 of the amended Act and any regulations made under paragraph 20(1)(a) of that Act an amount equal to the total of

(a) for the purposes of section 13 of the amended Act, subdivision c of Division B of Part I of that Act and any regulations made under paragraph 20(1)(a) of that Act, the taxpayer's proceeds of disposition of the property shall be deemed to be an amount equal to the total of its capital cost to the taxpayer and the amount, if any, by which the proceeds of disposition thereof otherwise determined exceed the fair market value of the property on valuation day;

(b) where the property has, by one or more transactions or events (other than the death of a taxpayer to which subsection 70(5) of the amended Act applies) between persons not dealing at arm's length, become vested in another taxpayer

(ii) for the purposes of this subsection, that other taxpayer shall be deemed to have acquired the property before 1972 at a capital cost equal to the capital cost of the property to the taxpayer who actually owned the property at the end of 1971, and to have owned it without interruption from December 31, 1971 until such time after 1971 as that other taxpayer disposed of it; and

(c) where the disposition occurred because of an election under subsection 110.6(19) of the amended Act,

(B) in any other case, the amount otherwise determined under subsection 110.6(19) of that Act to be the cost to the taxpayer of the property immediately after the reacquisition referred to in that subsection minus the amount by which the fair market value of the property on valuation day exceeded the capital cost of the property at the time it was last acquired before 1972, and

(ii) for the purposes of this subsection, the taxpayer's capital cost of the property after the reacquisition shall be deemed to be equal to the taxpayer's capital cost of the property before the reacquisition and the taxpayer shall be considered to have owned the property without interruption from December 31, 1971 until such time after February 22, 1994 as the taxpayer disposes of it.

(b) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount, in respect of each partnership by means of which the taxpayer carried on that business before 1972, equal to such portion of the total that would be determined under paragraph (a) in respect of the partnership, if the references in that paragraph to "the taxpayer" were read as references to "the partnership", as is designated by the taxpayer in the taxpayer's return of income under Part I of the amended Act for the year to be attributable to the taxpayer, except that where the total of the portions so designated by all members of the partnership is less than the total that would be so determined under paragraph (a) in respect of the partnership, the Minister may designate the portion of that total that is attributable to the taxpayer, in which case the portion so designated by the Minister in respect of the taxpayer shall be deemed to be the portion so designated by the taxpayer.

Proposed Amendment — ITAR 26(30)

(30) Additions to taxable Canadian property — Subsections (1.1) to (29) do not apply to a disposition by a non-resident person of a property

(a) that the person last acquired before April 27, 1995;

(b) that would not be a taxable Canadian property immediately before the disposition if section 115 were read as it applied to dispositions that occurred on April 26, 1995; and

(c) that would be a taxable Canadian property immediately before the disposition if section 115 were read as it applied to dispositions that occurred on January 1, 1996.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 29, will amend subsec. 26(30) to read as above, applicable to dispositions that occur after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Section 26 of the Income Tax Application Rules sets out the method for computing the adjusted cost base to a taxpayer of certain capital property owned by the taxpayer at the end of 1971. The general purpose of section 26 is to prevent gains that accrued before 1972 from being subject to tax.

Subsection 26(30) provides that dispositions by non-residents persons of certain types of property are not within the application of subsections 26(1.1) to (29) of the rules. Essentially, these are properties that became taxable Canadian properties because of changes to the definition "taxable Canadian property" that took effect in April, 1995. The relief provided by section 26 is not needed for such properties, as subsection 40(9) of the Income Tax Act ensures that a non-resident person's gains or losses on the disposition of such properties are limited to those that accrued after April 1995.

This amendment to subsection 26(30) of the rules ensures that the provision does not apply to property that becomes taxable Canadian property as a result of these proposals. The amendment applies to dispositions that occur after October 1, 1996.

History: Subsec. 26(30) added by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 249(3), applicable to dispositions that occur after April 26, 1995.
